Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can only give my view of the possible operation of the bill. In the case put a speculator or dealer—and sometimes they are the same person—buys of the mine at a fair price; he ships in interstate transportation to a point in the State of Missouri to the city of St. Louis, for instance, and proceeds to sell that coal at an exorbitant, an extortionate price. I do not believe this bill would control or could control that particular shipment, but the next time that man sought to transport coal in any State he would not get cars with which to do it; that is all, and in that way the bill would control.

Mr. REED of Missouri. This is what he would do upon the instant: If his name were John Smith and the first coal had been billed to John Smith, the second shipment of coal would be billed to William Jones.

Mr. CUMMINS. All laws may be evaded; I have never known one that could not be.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am talking about a thing that is so obvious that its evasion is absolutely certain. I think the Senator will get back to this, that in the practical operation of this bill the speculator will say to the coal mine owner, "What are you charging for your coal?" A price will be stated which is below the price declared to be reasonable, and the speculator will get his cars. When he gets those cars he will consign them, we will say, to a citizen in Des Moines, Iowa, and when the cars reach Des Moines, Iowa, and the coal gets into the hands of the individual, he will charge whatever he thinks the market commands. The question as to what the State of Iowa may do under such circumstances is quite another question which I do not want to mix with this. I have some views along that line to which I may give expression later.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I have not made up my mind as to what ought to be done. I am certainly anxious to bring relief if we can get it. I probably shall vote for this bill, but I see some difficulties in the way. I do not think it would meet a situation like this:

Let us suppose that $3.50 is a reasonable price at the mouth of the mine. If the operator was charging that price there would be no objection. But let us suppose that some large consumer of coal goes to the mine and finds out that the operator has contracted his output at $3.50, and this consumer says, "Look here; I must have coal, and I am willing to pay you $7 a ton for this coal at the mouth of the mine. You are having cars for your output. You bill those cars to me, and here is the cash."

How are the Interstate Commerce Commission going to find out about that? Of course, they can subpœna witnesses; but I fear that if you have an operator who is willing to take $7 under those circumstances, and you have a customer who is willing to pay it, they are going to defeat the operation of this bill. I fear that is so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a minute. This is not an idle suggestion. I know that several years ago that was done, and that some operators excused themselves by saying, "We were offered $12 and $15 at the mouth of the mine. The cash was put in our hands. Did you expect us to resist the temptation?"

Of course, I understand that under the bill, or perhaps under the commerce act, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have authority to subpœna witnesses if they knew that this infraction of the law was taking place. I know, of course, that it may be said that anybody can violate the law. I do not know that this is sufficient reason to vote against it. I realize that the difficulty here is largely one of transportation. Many operators—in fact, most of them—are honorable and are willing to accept reasonable prices. I have heard it said that 70 per cent—I think a larger per cent—would be willing to do that; but there is a certain other small percentage that will not comply with what is a reasonable price. I know that; and the scarcity of cars, while it hampers the law-abiding operator, furnishes the opportunity for the man who will fail to comply with it. There can not be any question about that.

I am uncertain as to what good may come from this legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. I thought the Senator from Ohio had the floor. I was going to ask him a question.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I have only had time to read this bill within the last hour, and I do not either criticize or eulogize it at this time. It is perfectly clear to me, however, that unless there is very active cooperation on the part of the States—unless the governors call their legislatures together and take action in regard to it—the people will be greatly disappointed as to the effect of this law. As stated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] this morning with his usual candor, it is not expected that this will solve the question. It is only a help; it is only an aid, and to that extent it may be justified; but there will not be any successful control of the matter of profiteering or of unreasonable prices unless the coal-mining States take hold of it and deal with it at the mouth of the mine.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator how far he thinks the States could deal with the matter in so far as it involves interstate commerce?

Mr. BORAH. I said "unless we had the cooperation of the States." Of course, we must take charge of the interstate-commerce part of it; but we can not reach the retailer, and we can not reach the man who wants to sell to the retailer who is shipping, if they have a combine between themselves.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, part of what I was going to say——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri let me ask the Senator from Idaho a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; I always yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. In the opinion of my friend from Idaho, who is a very able constitutional lawyer, how far can the State legislatures go in fixing the price that the dealer shall charge for coal when he sells it to the consumer or that the middleman shall charge when he sells it to the dealer?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know how far they can go in the various States. I know that so far as my State is concerned, under the provisions of its constitution they can practically control the price if it is a commodity which is impressed with a public service.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, my desire is to help, as far as possible, to solve this difficulty. I have no stubborn or opinionated position that I want to maintain; but before you can apply a remedy to any case you must first diagnose the case, and without arguing against this bill let me say that after some study of the coal situation my judgment is that this bill does not reach the present cause of our troubles; and if I am right about that, all of us want to apply the remedy.

The fact is, without giving detailed figures—although I can give them—that the coal mines that are now open in this country, run at full capacity, will produce nearly 25 per cent more coal every year than we use; and when I say "run at full capacity" I do not mean at the absolute 100 per cent maximum, but at the practical working capacity of a mine.

Mr. POMERENE. More than that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Ohio corrects me, and says it is more than 25 per cent. I can give the figures and shall, perhaps, to-morrow; but for the present, in this interesting colloquy where we are not trying to make speeches but trying to consult, let me merely express this view:

These bituminous coal mines are over 11,000 in number. There are over 7,000 independent operators. There was no evidence, in the long hearing we had before the La Follette committee, of any combination between mine-owners for the purpose of fixing prices or limiting output. I am speaking now of bituminous coal; please bear that in mind throughout, and I shall not be speaking of anthracite coal at all unless I specifically say so. It was further in evidence that whenever there came a great shortage of coal, and prices mounted rapidly, large numbers of what were known as "snow-bird" mines came into the market, and that over 1,000 of these so-called "snowbird" mines—which are small mines, frequently operated by the farmers who own the land, or by some one who owns a little mine that he does not work all the time—over 1,000 of them came into operation along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad alone within one year's time, when the price of coal had become very high; but—and I want to call particular attention to this—they came in because the spot coal market was controlled, and the price had become very high, and they could afford to mine this coal by expensive methods and market it by hauling it in with wagons and all sorts of devices which were employed to get it to the market. Necessarily, it cost more than the other coal. Nevertheless, when it came in it broke the market, and brought down the price of coal. Without stopping to argue the matter, I simply point out that this bill, if it goes into operation, will prevent the production and marketing of that particular coal.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I take up the matter at that point, and say a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let us deal with the facts as we know them; and I do not controvert a single statement made by the Senator from Missouri. I do controvert the conclusion which he just drew.

Less than half the normal production of bituminous coal has taken place since the 1st of April of this year. We ought to produce 800,000,000 or 900,000,000 tons per year. We have been producing at the rate of about half that. That is the first fact. Now, if we will assume—which the Senator assumes, and I think he is right about it—that the bituminous coal mines are now all at work, or nearly all at work, and they are producing quite enough to supply the demand for that kind of coal day by day if the coal that is brought to the surface or could be brought to the surface during the day could that night be transported to the places at which it is consumed, I think we would have no coal shortage for any considerable length of time; probably none at all; but it can not be. In order that it shall be transported even with ordinary dispatch to the places at which it is needed, the railroads must carry, practically speaking, in three months what they have heretofore, even when in the best of condition, required six months to carry. No matter, therefore, how much coal we produce, we can not get it promptly to the places of consumption, and with the impairment that now exists in railway facilities it will be still less possible to get it promptly to these places of consumption.

I have said that simply to reach this conclusion: No matter how ample our production may be, there is bound to be a coal shortage in a great many parts of the country. We can not avoid that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not agree with the Senator in that last conclusion.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is my conclusion about it. It is no more possible to move the coal from the places where it is produced to the places where it is consumed in time to meet the necessities of the people than it would be to transport it to the heavenly land.

But I come now to the point on which I differ from the conclusions of the Senator from Missouri. I do not think the enactment of this measure will prevent the opening of high-cost mines. If a high-cost mine can secure a customer for its coal, there will be no interference by the Interstate Commerce Commission. No price, considered from the standpoint of an individual producer, is too high which does not afford a fair and reasonable profit to the producer.

The Interstate Commerce Commission would not deny cars to a mine that was charging $10 a ton if it cost that mine $9.50 a ton to produce its coal, if there were ample railroad facilities. It would not deny transportation to that producer simply because he was charging $10 a ton for his coal. But if it cost the producer $1.50 to produce a ton of coal, and he was attempting to get $10 a ton for it at the mine, then the power which I think is conferred in this bill would be exercised, and cars would be refused to that producer.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I just want to add more confusion to the proposition. I think the Senator from Missouri is right in calling these "mushroom" mines. I saw a list of one of the large carrying roads of the South, showing that they had five regular mines, and that there were some twenty-odd new mines opened up.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Missouri very kindly yields to me for the purpose of making a request. I asked unanimous consent at 2 o'clock that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of the so-called coal distribution bill. There was objection made to that request, and I then moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. After a conference with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], I understand that at this time he will not object to a request of that character, and therefore, withdrawing the motion, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid before the Senate, and that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield for that purpose?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel administrator, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I will conclude, with the permission of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. The regular mines stated that they could not get cars with which to fulfill their contracts, since the railroad commission would allocate cars to these "mushroom" mines, and the "mushroom" mines asked a very much higher price for the coal. Therefore there is no chance to get cars to carry coal which is sold at the contract price. Hence we go around in a circle, and keep the price up on the people.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, bearing in mind that the prime purposes of this bill are to do two things, first, to get the coal to the consumer who must have it first——

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. The consumer to whom it is most necessary. Surely that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. The existing law is ample in that respect.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the purpose of the law, then?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the purpose of the existing law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The second purpose is to keep the price down.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the purpose.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Of course, you destroy the second purpose the moment you say you are going to permit cars to be sent to the mine that may have to charge $8 when another mine can produce coal for $2. You necessarily shut out the so-called "snowbird" mine.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. REED of Missouri. However, I only mention that as an incident as I go along, and I remark in disposing of that particular thing for the present, that before this board gets through classifying mines, and passing upon the right of an individual mine to produce at a particular price, and have cars, the winter will be over, and the summer and its flowers will be here.

We have had some experience with a board undertaking to classify a mine. It had to revise its work time and time again, and when it had finished, it had produced confusion worse confounded. So that all this commission can do for quick action is to deal with this matter by general rules applicable to districts and coal fields. That is my judgment. I may be wrong about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there would be great weight and force in the observation of the Senator from Missouri if it were not for the fact that for two or three months at least a fuel administration has been functioning.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Under what authority?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know of any authority.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINS. It has accumulated all the facts; it knows the situation, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is informed now with regard to the conditions which exist, and it could begin to operate, and I think with justice, and immediately, and it would not require the investigation to which the Senator refers.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will venture to differ with my friend, for whose opinions I always have the utmost respect. I venture to say that whenever a usurping body of men, I think without authority of law, starts out to accumulate some figures in advance which apply to the entire United States, this great coal problem, with its 11,000 open mines scattered over 26 States, you will find out that they will not solve the problem and that no human brain can solve it, or work it out, unless it is the result of experience stretching over a period of years. But I say again, we are stopping to discuss a question which I think is not basic.

I have already said that the productive capacity of the mines is far beyond the wants of the people. I was about to say, and now say, that there is a surplus of mine labor in this country, the exact percentage of which I can not state, but if I recall rightly there are enough miners in this country so that if they worked one-half of the time eight hours a day they could produce all the coal this country needs. That may be an overstatement of the amount of labor, but I am very sure it could be recruited to that point in a short time.

Therefore we have the condition of an unlimited supply of coal, mines open sufficient to supply the public, and miners ready to produce coal. Now we come to the question as to what Congress can do to facilitate the distribution of that coal, and that leads us to the question of how much coal can be produced. I understand it is generally conceded that between now and the time snow flies coal can be brought to the mouths of the mines, if there are cars there to receive it, and so, after all, the whole question comes to a question of transportation.

We are not undertaking in this bill to deal with transportation except in the allocation of the cars to particular mines or to particular destinations, and it is to that phase of the question, that of transportation, that I desire to invite the attention of the Senate; not for the purpose of making a speech, but for the purpose of offering a suggestion which may be thought over. What can the Congress do to get the cars to the mouth of the mine?

Obviously, the first thing is to get the railroad equipment in proper shape. Why is it not in proper shape? Because the men who have been repairing the cars and engines have quit, and because other men have not been allowed to take their places and do that work. Is not that the absolute truth of this situation? It was due to two causes until the coal strike was settled; but the strike is now settled. If we can get rid of the railroad strike, the question will be very largely solved, although I admit it will take the capacity and work of the railroads and some shifting of cars in order to get them to the mouths of the mines.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I quite agree that the strike has curtailed the power of the railroads. It is curtailing them now. But even were the railroads at normal capacity to-day, there would have to be priority orders of the commission in order to move the requisite amount of coal to certain parts of the country during the next three months.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not deny that.

Mr. KELLOGG. New England and the Northwest could not be supplied with the normal number of cars unless essential industries were given priority in the movement of those cars.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have not challenged that.

Mr. KELLOGG. Even though the roads were at full capacity.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have not challenged that; in fact, I stated that. But those powers of allocation of cars certainly are to be found in the present law. This bill undertakes to deal with prices; that is all. Let us be frank about it. You have the power of allocation, but you want something else. You want the power to deal with prices. I want to deal with the other two questions and will lay the price question aside for the present.

We have the power of allocating the cars, and now the question is—and this is the crux of the matter—how are we going to get the necessary cars? We can not get that unless one of two things is done—that the railroad strike is settled and the shopmen return to their positions, or that the Government shall insist that the shops shall be opened and protect against any kind of interference the men who go to the shops. Now, that is just the question that is before us, and we are trying to dodge it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I give the Senator my view on that subject?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with the Senator entirely that the primal, fundamental question is one of transportation, and that we are met with a situation in which, let us say, 20 per cent of the engines and cars of all the railroads of the United States are in bad order. I am not attempting to be accurate about that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think the Senator understates it.

Mr. CUMMINS. That might understate it rather than overstate it. If all the shops of the railroad companies were filled to-morrow with competent men, or if the strike were settled to-morrow and the strikers were all taken back, it would require six months to repair the equipment of the railroad companies so that they could move traffic at their highest capacity. We are bound, therefore, no matter what is done, to have in the next three or four months a shortage of equipment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But I think now the Senator, while making an accurate statement, nevertheless has made a statement that will not necessarily be applied here. I agree that it might take six months to bring the equipment back to its highest state of repair, but I undertake to say if the strike were settled to-morrow that in two weeks' time—of course, I am guessing at it, and in a way expressing an opinion—the freight engines and the coal cars necessary to transport the coal could be put into condition. We might have passenger engines and passenger trains and many classes of cars still out of commission, but I have no doubt that the first-class railroad men would get the cars for handling coal and the engines for hauling the cars in condition in a very short time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Iowa if the Interstate Commerce Commission is not now issuing priority orders and thus allocating cars?

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is; and I am coming to that in a moment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That it does, I suppose, under the provision of the transportation act authorizing it "to give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movement of traffic under permits at such time and for such periods as it may determine, and to modify, change, suspend, or annul them." So, leaving out of consideration the price feature of the bill under consideration—let us assume that no one is going to charge any exorbitant price at all—it is a mere matter of getting the cars to effect the transportation. Why does not the present law cover all the requirements?

Mr. CUMMINS. It covers everything but the right to lay an embargo in order to control prices.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So, then, the purpose is really not to repose in the commission a power to accomplish the orderly transportation of coal, because that is already granted, but to control transportation so as to regulate the price.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said when I began, and I repeat, that the bill will not add engines and cars to the equipment of the railroad companies. It will not add anything to increased capacity of the railroad companies to carry traffic. But inasmuch as there is an opportunity, by reason of the shortage both in carrying capacity and in coal in various parts of the country, this measure is intended to prevent coal operators, and in some instances coal dealers, from charging unreasonable prices.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That was, as I understood, the purpose of the bill, but the discussion here has led me to believe that it was not the purpose of the bill, but that the real purpose was actually to accomplish the transportation of coal to those sections in which it was most needed as against those sections in which it was not most needed, to the essential industries and domestic needs as against nonessential industries.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the law is ample upon that point.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator from Iowa seems to think that in that respect the bill is but a duplicate of the existing statute. The bill would seem to give specific power to issue priorities for the purpose of controlling the price. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa, or anyone else who may care to speak on the subject, give us some clear idea concerning the basis for the exercise of any such power by the Congress of the United States.

My own judgment of the matter, if the Senator will pardon me, is in a state of uncertainty, I must confess, in view of some recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I refer, of course, to the child-labor case and others of the same character. When that legislation was first before the Senate I conceived the power of the Congress to enact the child labor law was so clear that it would be rather an offensive exhibition of erudition to endeavor to establish that proposition, but the Supreme Court held otherwise. I conceived that it was a very simple matter.

It occurred to me that at the time prior to the adoption of our Constitution each of the States exercising sovereign powers was entitled to exclude the products of any other State from within its borders if it saw fit to do so. Of course, that would be a very unwise policy to pursue, but that each State had that power I supposed no one would undertake to dispute. Now, either it retained that power or it conferred it upon the Federal Government. The power, it seems to me, was not hung up in the air somewhere. That the States did not retain that power is settled beyond question, because no State can exclude the products of another State at its will. That is solely within the power of Congress. So it occurred to me that the power of Congress in that respect must be unlimited, and if that view was correct, then, of course, Congress could pass a law practically excluding from one State the products of another State because the price charged for them was excessive in the judgment of those administering the law.

But the Supreme Court has held in the child-labor case, as I understand it, that there is no such power in the Congress to exclude the passage from one State to another of the products of the first-mentioned State, and that it has the power to exclude only those products which in some way affect the public morals or the public health or in some other way bring themselves under the control and regulation of the police powers. Obviously if that doctrine is correct, we could not prohibit the transportation of harmless products—indeed, most essential and desirable products—simply because the price was too high, any more than we could because they were manufactured by child labor, as seems to me.

I indicate how my mind is running on the proposition and should be very glad to hear from the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. That subject has not been absent from my mind. It has given me a great deal of concern. I intended to discuss the bill for a brief time, including some attention to the questions of law involved in it, but I asked that the bill be laid before the Senate for its consideration, and pending that request or pending the motion which I made that the Senate take it up for consideration, the debate upon the merits of the bill began. I would be very glad to give my views upon the subject, but I do not want to give them separately from my general discussion of the bill, which I think I may be able to present to the Senate to-morrow, or, if not to-morrow, some time during the progress of the debate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator has touched upon the point which is giving me the most trouble of all. I think his conclusions are absolutely right in reference to the matter, and that it relates to transportation. But I hope before he gets through he can tell us how we can make it safe for men to work in the shops where there is a strike.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that the Senator from Iowa has been deprived of opening the debate as he was entitled to do, but the bill was sort of backed into the legislative program and that resulted in remarks having been made by others, and I have fallen into the error of following along. I should like to be permitted to take just enough time not to leave what I have said utterly in the air and partially stated.

As I have said, the difficulty, therefore, is one of transportation, and what we ought to be doing is not devoting our attention to the effect of the coal shortage, which may be high prices, so much as to removing the cause of the high prices, which is a shortage of coal, and the cause of the shortage of coal is the shortage of cars.

Now, I am not going to stand here and say that I have an out-of-hand solution, but I think there are enough powers in this Government and have been to have prevented this situation. It is here and I say for the moment—and I shall have more to say about the matter to-morrow or Monday—simply that I may not be misunderstood, I say that this railroad equipment must be furnished. Whether that result is to be accomplished by the railroad presidents conceding what the men want, or whether it is to be accomplished by the Federal Government saying that the movement of interstate commerce shall not be prevented, or whether it is to be worked out through the Congress or to be otherwise worked out, are questions that may require profound consideration. But that is the real trouble, so what is the use of talking about remedying that trouble by simply dealing with a symptom which springs out of the trouble itself? We ought to be courageous enough to face it. I am ready to take my share of the responsibility with the other Members of this body and with the President. However, there is one other phase of the situation to which I wish to call attention.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to divert all of the cars in the United States, if it wishes to do so, to the coal-carrying trade; but the Interstate Commerce Commission is not exercising that power fully and effectively. I am prepared to prove that fact. I am not prepared to introduce any great volume of evidence this evening, but, just as a sample, I call attention to a letter dated September 1, 1922, which reads as follows:

SEPTEMBER 1, 1922.

Gen. R. C. MARSHALL,
1038 Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to petition filed by you on behalf of the Associated General Contractors' of America for modification of service order No. 23, and on which division 5 accorded you a hearing August 25:

There is inclosed for your information copy of amendment 5 to service order No. 23, entered to-day, effective at midnight September 3, which permits of the use of open-top cars, 42 inches or less in height, for the movement of commodities other than coal. Under service order No. 23 approximately 62,000 open-top cars, less than 36 inches in height, were exempted from being preferentially loaded with coal. Amendment 5 will release approximately 34,000 additional open-top cars from this preferential loading, which we feel will, to a considerable extent, relieve the interests you represent, as well as others primarily dependent upon the use of open-top cars, for the movement of their commodities.

This action on our part should not be taken as our final word on this subject, but with the present and necessary demands for coal, it is not felt that we can consistently go further at this time. We will continue, as we have in the past, to keep in daily touch with the situation and as soon as we feel that the situation warrants action will be taken to relax our service order. We will be glad, in the meantime, if you will keep us informed of the general situation and of any exigencies which might require special attention.

Very truly yours,

CLYDE B. AITCHISON, Commissioner.

Amendment 5 to service order No. 23 of the Interstate Commerce Commission, referred to in the letter, reads as follows:

Amendment No. 5 to service order No. 23.

At a session of the Interstate Commerce Commission, division 5, held at its office in Washington, D. C., on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1922.

It is ordered, That the proviso in service order No. 23, entered July 25, 1922, which reads:

"Provided, That the phrase 'suitable for the loading and transportation of coal,' as used in this order, shall not include or embrace flat (fixed) bottom gondola cars with sides less than 36 inches in height, inside measurement, or cars equipped with racks, or cars which, on July 1, 1922, had been definitely retired from service for the transportation of coal and stenciled or tagged for other service," be, and it is hereby, amended, effective at midnight of September 3, 1922, to read:

"Provided, That the phrase 'open-top cars suitable for the loading and transportation of coal,' as used in this order, shall not include or embrace flat (fixed) bottom gondola cars with sides 42 inches—or less in height, inside measurement, or cars equipped with racks, or cars which, on July 1, 1922, had been definitely retired from service for the transportation of coal and stenciled or tagged for other service."

The others were 36 inches—

And it is further ordered, That copies of this order be served upon the carriers upon whom service order No. 23 was served, and that notice hereof be given to the general public by depositing a copy of this order in the office of the secretary of the commission, at Washington, D. C.

By the commission, division 5.

[SEAL.] GEORGE B. MCGINTY, Secretary.

Mr. President, with this coal crisis before us, with the mines open, and I am informed with many of them confronted by an actual shortage of cars, on the 1st day of this month the Interstate Commerce Commission modifies its order so as to take from the coal business 34,000 more cars suitable for handling coal than have already been taken from it.

I do not know how many cars would be included if all of those open-top cars with sides 36 inches high, as well as those with sides 40 inches high, were devoted to the coal-carrying trade; but 34,000 of them, it appears, have sides 36 inches high and less than 42 inches high; so that it is fair to assume that a very large number of cars which could be put into the coal-carrying business are now being employed in the handling of other commodities than coal.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will yield in a moment. For the sake of making the cars go as far as they can in relieving the coal situation, why should not the Interstate Commerce Commission take action exactly the converse of that which it took and order into the coal-carrying trade every car that is fit for the transportation of coal?

It is true that it will work a great hardship upon the builders and upon others who are shipping commodities in those cars, but if what is stated here is true—and I think it undoubtedly is—when we do the best we can, we shall still be confronted with some difficulty, but if that difficulty comes in the wintertime the failure to handle these other materials in the wintertime will be a much less calamity than if at present the miners are obliged to stop their work because the coal can not be sent out, when it is essential that it be sent out in order to keep the mines at full blast.

I have already called attention to and produced evidence that I think is conclusive that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not using the powers it now possesses but has been misusing them. I do not want to say that harshly of the Interstate Commerce Commission; I do not want to criticize it; but it has been misusing its power. I undertake to say that if to-day the Interstate Commerce Commission would employ all the powers it has and not only turn over the open flat cars but such of the other freight cars as could be used the production of coal from the mines could be enormously increased. One thing we ought to be looking after is to see that the Interstate Commerce Commission does this thing which I speak of and does it quickly. I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I know nothing about the circumstances which surrounded the issuance of the order which the Senator from Missouri has just read. I inquire whether he knows anything about them?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not, except that it has been stated to me that there has been a clamor for cars by the coal mines, there being a tremendous shortage; that right in the teeth of that situation this order comes out, and that it is issued for the purpose of facilitating the handling of building material; and that fact appears, indeed, upon its face.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I think the Senator from Missouri ought to inquire of the Interstate Commerce Commission the reasons for issuing the order before the commission is condemned. It may be supported for the very best of reasons, and I hope that the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission will not be conclusively condemned until we know what the reasons are. For instance—and this might be one of the reasons—I believe there are from 20,000 to 25,000 cars loaded with coal now on the sidetracks of the various railroads which can not be moved to their destination.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator tell me why the railroads can not haul a car of coal if they can haul a car of cement?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am talking about the inability of certain railroads to move the coal which is upon their sidetracks already loaded, and it may very well be that these very cars—I know nothing about them—can be used to better advantage for the purpose indicated by the commission than for the shipment of coal. I am not expressing an opinion, and I hope the Senator from Missouri will reserve his judgment until it is known what induced the commission to enter the order.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I have made no attack upon the Interstate Commerce Commission; I expressly said that I was not doing it. I am calling the attention of this body to the fact that the only remedy for the coal situation is cars, and that here are 34,000 cars taken on the first day of September for use in other business than that of transporting coal, although they are suitable for the transportation of coal. The Senator says there may be coal upon the sidetracks of the railroads which can not be moved. If the coal on the tracks can not be moved, a car loaded with cement or other building material can not be moved if it is on the same railroad.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is very true.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And if it is on a different railroad and can be moved there and there is a surplus of engines to haul it, the Interstate Commerce Commission had better be getting those engines over on the other tracks to haul the coal. If we are going to freeze to death and starve to death, we had better get at the cause of it instead of getting at the price we are going to pay. I have no objection to keeping down prices; but I hold to the old-fashioned theory that if you can get enough of anything, and get it to the man who wants it, the prices very speedily take care of themselves.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The trouble with this situation is cars, cars, cars; engines, engines, engines. That is the problem that we ought to face, and we ought to face it like men. We ought not to be dodging around behind a subterfuge of price fixing. I will go after the profiteer as long as you can get after him under the Constitution and lay the lash across his back as vigorously and willingly as anybody. I want a condition here that will get the coal to the people; and I say that it is perfectly plain—and I have many facts and figures to buttress my statement—that if we can get the cars and the engines we can very nearly solve this coal proposition so that nobody will suffer. Let us get at that. Let us not be whittling around here with something else, and passing the bill and going home and saying, "We have done the job," when we have not done it, and when we well know we have not done it.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. DIAL. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I was told yesterday that there were several thousand loaded cars of coal in one yard that could not be moved because the hose connections had been cut. As I say, I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then, Mr. President, that means that somebody has been destroying the hose of these cars. If that is true, that sort of thing has to be dealt with; that is all there is about it; and we ought to be big enough to deal with it. We ought not to be getting around behind something that looks like a way of dealing with it when it is not; and I do not mean to charge, now, that the Senator who introduced this bill has not done it in the best of faith. I know he has. He never did anything in his life that was not honorable and high minded, and I mean that; but this is not the way to get at this matter.

If we were going to have a shortage of radishes in the market, and if they were a great essential and everybody had to have radishes, we would not deal with the situation so much by regulating the price in the market as we would by going out and opening the fields and planting enough so that everybody would have a surfeit. If a bridge was needed out on the road that would bring the radishes to town, we would try to build that bridge and get them in.

Suppose you regulate the price. Let us say that is all right if you have any authority to do it; yet if a man is burning coal at $3 a ton, and if he needs 3 tons of coal to last him through a given period of time, and he can get only 1, it does not do him much good to know that he got that 1 ton for $3. He would be glad to pay $10, and yet that would not justify some profiteer in charging him the $10. No matter what price you get it at, if you get it at 50 cents a ton, you have not solved this difficulty to the individual who has to go supperless to bed. You have not solved this question for the man whose wife gets pneumonia because the house is not heated. You have not solved this question at all, when you have fixed the price, for the manufacturing establishment that has to close its furnaces and turn thousands of people out of employment. The thing to do is to get the coal, and the only way I know to get the coal is to get the cars, and if I were President of the United States you would get the cars—and I am not putting myself up for President, either.

Mr. CUMMINS. How? How would the Senator do it if he were President?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I would get them, and I would get them under the Constitution, and I would see whether there were any two crowds of men in this country who could freeze this country to death. The trouble is, we are presented here with a spectacle of a boy in the chilly spring days going joyfully down to the water's edge, stripping himself, and then standing on the bank shivering, afraid to jump in.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I am sure everyone would be very much interested in knowing how the Senator would proceed, because that is the problem, of course. How would the Senator do it? Would he yield to the men and surrender to their demands? Is that the idea? Or, if not, what would he do?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Or would I sit down and twiddle my thumbs and say I could do nothing?

Mr. LENROOT. What would the Senator do?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will tell the Senator one thing I would do. At the present moment I would put into the coal service every car that could run. I would tell these gentlemen on both sides that I would enforce the law of the United States, and I would follow it not by a mere assertion but by action.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has not that been done?

Mr. REED of Missouri. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. I venture to say that the President has made every effort within his constitutional power to protect the men and the property engaged in interstate commerce. So far as I know, there is nothing he could have done that he has not done. He can not compel these men to return to work.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. He can not compel the railway executives to accept the proposition of the men, and the railway executives can not hire the men necessary to keep engines and cars in repair.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I can not accept all of those statements.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that those things are true—that is, from my standpoint. It is easy enough to say that we ought to have the cars and we ought to have the engines. God knows we ought to have both of them, but I do not know any way to get them. I have a suggestion to make some of these days, if the situation does not change. It will not please my brethren upon this side of the Chamber, a great many of them, and I suppose it will not be at all in harmony with the views of a great many upon the other side of the Chamber; but when the railroad companies can not protect the men whom they have employed, and the Government of the United States finds it impossible to protect them, and we can not repair engines, and we can not repair cars, and we can not get coal to its destination——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then we will sit down and regulate the price, and let it go at that?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, no; the Senator from Missouri has no right to say that. I would regulate the price until we can put into effect the only ultimate remedy. There is but one organization that can do more to operate these roads than the owners of the roads, and that is the Government of the United States.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to be misunderstood in my remarks. I do not want to lay all the responsibility in this case on the President. I am speaking of Congress as well as the President. I say that we ought all of us to be courageous enough to meet this situation, and take the responsibility; and I think a statute could be passed in this Congress, if the Congress would bring itself up to the point I am talking about, that would terminate this controversy. I am not prepared to say that I can present that out of hand. It may be that the Government will have to take over the railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope it will not.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I hope it will not.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it may be compelled to do it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We all hope it will not. We all hope that labor will be reasonable; we all hope that capital will be reasonable; but it seems to me that to talk about freezing and starving the people of the United States when the bone of contention concerns the question of priority of men in the shops is producing a terrible disaster for a cause that is not in proportion to the disaster.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to express my profound agreement with the sentiment just uttered by the Senator from Missouri. It is unthinkable that we should starve and freeze in this country because the senior privileges of the shopmen of the United States can not be adjusted in some way in order to enable them to go to work.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the whole purpose of what I rose to say was to lay before the Senate the fact that we are not employing the facilities we now have, and to urge upon the Senate the consideration of some plan that will get the coal out of the ground and get it to the consumers, and to urge in that connection that however earnestly this bill may have been conceived, the shot, if you please, falls short of the mark, and that when we pass this bill, if we do pass it, we will not have accomplished our purpose, and I make bold to say we will have made the situation worse.

I have seen this attempt of one man or one board to run the business of 110,000,000 people, and you have all seen it. I do not want to thrash over old straw or go into old matters. I have not the slightest doubt that the last coal administration we had in this country produced infinitely more harm than it did good.

Let me give you the simplest of illustrations. There were here in the city of Washington a lot of men who were engaged in the coal business, and who had their teams and their organizations for distribution. Before the coal administration had been in active operation for 30 days men were having to go down and haul coal home in their automobiles, get it in little truck wagons, and in every way they could. The whole of that organization had been broken up. Now, that is not said unkindly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED of Missouri. In a moment. It is simply an impossibility for any set of men in Washington to sit here and manage a great business of that kind. They may have the best of intentions, but they make the most egregious blunders.

I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator really intended seriously the statement he has just made. Is it the opinion of the Senator, candidly and seriously, that during the dark days of the war we ought to have allowed coal to go to unessential industries, and to have permitted the industries necessary to be carried on at fever heat for the purpose of bringing the war to a termination to take their chances with the unessential industries, and that we should not have regulated in some way the distribution of coal in that trying hour?

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is a wholly different question than the one I am discussing. It may have been embraced in what was undertaken by the Government. The Government undertook to take hold of the whole coal industry—not merely to say that a preference should be given to certain essential industries, and that they should be supplied first—and the whole process of distribution and supply was disturbed, interrupted, and thrown out of joint.

Without going into a discussion of it, to show some of the mistakes, we needed 4,000,000 tons of coal to bunker all of the ships that touched at American ports. Enough coal was not permitted to go to those ports to bunker those ships. They lay tied up at docks for days and days; but at the same time there were sent to the Northwest part of this country 4,000,000 more tons of coal than had ever been sent there, and a great part of it, large quantities of it, was burned up on the docks.

However, those are details. The Senator asked me for my reason. I say that every attempt that has ever been made to regulate a great business in this country has ended in ignominious failure.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would not like to enter into any controversy with the Senator concerning the question of the perfection of the administration of these acts. I assumed the statement of the Senator to be in the nature of a condemnation of the legislation enacted by Congress. It may be that in its administration some mistakes were made.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am speaking of the administration of the acts. We undertook to take the whole of the coal business within our hands. They did not get the coal down to bunker the ships. They closed down every factory east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio for 14 days in order to relieve a railroad congestion which they claimed was due chiefly to the fact that the ships could not move the goods from the eastern ports, and the cars were backed up along the lines of road.

We made mistakes in the war. I am not going to drag those over, I simply cite this as an illustration, one of the things we undertook, and if this bill undertakes to go in and interfere with production, to classify the mines and fix the prices, I am asking myself the question whether, in the long run, it will not cost the people of this country more money than if we do not attempt to do it, because when men are allowed to run their own business, when they have some additional incentive in the way of additional profits to speed them on to production, when they make their own bargains, they are likely to produce at a maximum, and every doubt you throw over the situation, every official interference you have, is likely to be a brake upon production, and in the end the people pay for it. That is well worthy of consideration.

We may go on and try this experiment. I would like to have the Senate devote itself to the proposition of getting cars and engines to these mines, and I would like to see the Interstate Commerce Commission proceed with the execution of its powers, and do it now, and see that every mine in this country has some kind of a car in which to load this coal.

Now you come to the question of price. Of course, if the coal is sold at the mouth of the mine, the character of the car makes no difference; but if the coal is sold for delivery at a point, and the mine owner has to load his coal in a box car, for instance, to ship it, that will entail an additional cost. All of those questions must come up for settlement.

Mr. President, I have finished what I wanted to say. The thing we ought to do is to get our minds on the real point—cars and engines—and if it is necessary to invoke the radical and supreme powers of this Government, as far as it has such powers, to accomplish that end, we ought to be brave enough to do it.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF THE PHILIPPINES, 1921 (S. DOC. NO. 246).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 21 of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, together with the reports of the heads of the various departments and bureaus of the Philippine government, for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1921.

I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of War as to the printing of this report as a congressional document.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 1, 1922.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S COMPLAINT AGAINST STRIKING RAILROAD SHOPMEN.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, the bill in equity filed by the Attorney General of the United States in the case in which an injunction against the strikers has been asked is a matter of some consequence. I have a full copy of it, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, together with a portion of the remarks of the Attorney General in presenting the bill to the court.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

(In Equity No. —.)

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

United States of America, complainant, v. Railway Employees' Department of the American Federation of Labor, Bert M. Jewell, president, J. F. McGrath, vice president, and John Scott, secretary and treasurer; International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers, James W. Kline, president; International Alliance of Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers, J. J. Hynes, president; International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, J. A. Franklin, president; Brotherhood of Railway Car Men of America, Martin F. Ryan, president; International Association of Machinists, William H. Johnston, international president, and E. C. Davison, grand secretary and treasurer; International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, James P. Noonan, president; Atlanta, Tennessee & Northern System Federation, No. 132, J. M. Key, president, and Robert A. Seabury, secretary thereof; and numerous others system federations and the president and secretary of each thereof, defendants.

BILL OF COMPLAINT.

The United States of America, by its attorney for the northern district of Illinois, acting under the direction of the Attorney General, brings this bill of complaint against the following-named labor organizations and the officers and their successors in office and members of each thereof and others whose names to complainant are unknown, as defendants, and alleges—

I. (1) Railway employees' department of the American Federation of Labor is a voluntary labor organization, with its headquarters and principal place of business located at 4750 Broadway, Chicago, State of Illinois; Bert M. Jewell, president, J. E. McGrath, vice president, and John Scott, secretary and treasurer thereof, and who are now and during all of the times of the grievances hereinafter complained of have been within the northern district of Illinois; they are sued individually as representatives of all the members and in their respective official capacities.

(2) International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers is a voluntary labor organization, with its headquarters and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, and James W. Kline, president thereof, who is a resident and citizen of said city and State; he is sued as such president, also individually and as representative of all of the members, of whom there are approximately 14,000.

(3) International Alliance of Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers is a voluntary labor organization, with its headquarters and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, and J. J. Hynes, president thereof, who is a resident and citizen of said city and State; he is sued as such president, also individually and as representative of all of the members, of whom there are approximately 18,500.

(4) International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America is a voluntary labor organization, with its headquarters and principal place of business in the city of Kansas City, State of Missouri, and J. A. Franklin, president thereof, who is a resident and citizen of said city and State; he is sued as such president, also individually and as representative of all of the members, of whom there are approximately 33,500.

(5) Brotherhood of Railway Car Men of America is a voluntary labor organization, with its headquarters and principal place of business in the city of Kansas City, State of Kansas, and Martin F. Ryan, president thereof, a resident and citizen of said city and State; he is sued as such president, also individually and as representative of all of the members, of whom there are approximately 224,400.

(6) International Association of Machinists is a voluntary labor organization, with its headquarters and principal place of business located in the city of Washington, D. C., William H. Johnston, international president, and E. C. Davison, grand secretary and treasurer thereof, who are residents and citizens of said city; they are sued as such officers, also individually and as representatives of all of the members, of whom there are approximately 86,500.

(7) International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers is a voluntary labor organization, with its headquarters and principal place of business located in the city of Washington, D. C., and James P. Noonan, president thereof, a resident and citizen of said city; he is sued as such president, also individually and as representative of all of the members, of whom there are approximately 24,000.

(8) Numerous system federations, each of which is made a defendant herein, and the respective officers of each who are sued as such officers, also individually and as representative of all the members of their respective federations. Each federation with its number, together with the names and addresses of its officers, are shown by the following table, viz:

The defendants Jewell, McGrath, Scott, Johnston, Noonan, Kline, Hynes, Franklin, and Ryan, and their successors in office are also sued as members of the executive council of the railway employees' department of the American Federation of Labor, of which the Federated Shop Crafts are a part.

II. Approximately 400,000 persons comprise the membership of the International Alliance of Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers, International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, Brotherhood of Railway Car Men of America, International Association of Machinists, and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which are also known and designated as the Federated Shop Crafts; a certain number (which varies according to the location and size of the shops) of members of each of the six shop crafts constitute the membership of each of the aforesaid system federations.

Prior to the grievances hereinafter complained of the entire membership of Federated Shop Crafts were in the regular and established employment of the railway companies operating throughout the continental United States and engaged in carrying commerce among the States, and a substantial percentage of such membership had been so employed for a great many years. The Federated Shop Crafts was represented on one or more railway companies, or a system of railway companies operated under a single management or control, through one of the foregoing system federations. For the purpose of carrying on the activities hereinafter complained of, local executive committees have also been recently organized and established at local points on one or more railway companies, or system of railway companies operated under a single management or control, consisting of three persons from each of the six crafts, one of whom shall be designated as chairman, one as vice chairman, and one as secretary. The aforesaid railway employees' department issues and mails bulletins to the secretaries of the system federations in numbers sufficient for such secretaries to supply their respective local points.

III. The railway companies own and operate as the railway transportation system throughout the continental United States a total of approximately 250,000 miles of main and branch lines of railroads, and have in their service approximately 2,000,000 employees, who constitute six general divisions, i. e., (A) clerical and station forces and telegraphers, 480,000; (B) maintenance of way and unskilled labor, 620,000; (C) shop employees, 490,000; (D) engine service employees, 175,000; (E) train service employees, 220,000; (F) miscellaneous, 25,000. In the operation of railway freight and passenger trains and all rolling stock for the transportation of freight and passengers in interstate and foreign commerce and the carriage and handling of the mails it is necessary for the safety of the passengers and crews, and for the protection of the property carried, that all rolling stock and equipment shall be maintained in a complete state of repair and in perfect running order. To that end the railway companies maintain extensive shops at appropriate points on the line at which locomotives and cars are inspected after each run and overhauled or repaired whenever necessary. For the service of inspection, overhauling, and repairing, particularly on the larger systems, very large forces of laborers and skilled mechanics who have become experienced in and adapted to the work are essential. Without the shops in full and complete operation at all times the service required of the railway companies in the transportation of freight and passengers in interstate and foreign commerce and the carriage and handling of the mails is necessarily impaired to the extent that such operation and forces are inadequate. If the shop employees leave or abandon their work or otherwise are taken away, the rolling stock and equipment will so rapidly deteriorate that within a comparatively short time it will be unsafe and completely broken down. Immediately prior to the commission of the grievances hereinafter complained of the total membership of the Federated Shop Crafts (with minor exceptions, which include substantially all of the officers thereof) were in the peaceful and acceptable employment of all of the railway companies comprising the entire transportation system of the continental United States, which enabled such railway companies to discharge their functions as common carriers according to the law in such case made and provided, to the satisfaction of the traveling and shipping public, and to the health, comfort, happiness, and the great commercial prosperity of more than 100,000,000 people.

IV. Inter alia, in order "to best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people"; and "to best meet the emergency and serve the public interest"; and "to properly serve the public"; and "that the public interest will be promoted"; and to consider "the transportation needs of the country"; and to meet the necessity of enlarging the facilities "in order to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation"; and to enable the carriers "properly to meet the transportation needs of the public," the Congress of the United States enacted the transportation act of 1920, which for the adjustment and settlement of disputes between the railway companies and their employees, which in the past had endangered the peace and good order of society and openly disturbed the same, by Title III, entitled "Disputes between carriers and their employees and subordinate officials," established the Railroad Labor Board. The personnel, duties, and powers of said board are fully set forth in sections 300 to 316, inclusive (41 Stat., pp. 469–474), of said act.

The parties recognizing and invoking the jurisdiction and authority of the Railroad Labor Board over the subject matter, there was duly brought before, and the Railroad Labor Board received, a dispute entitled Alabama & Vicksburg Railway Co. v. Railway Employees' Department American Federation of Labor (Federated Shop Crafts) et al., Docket No. 1300. The complaint filed therein was in due form as provided for by the rules and regulations of said board. Notice of said complaint was duly and legally given to said employees, and especially to the proper officials of the several labor organizations heretofore described. All formal answers to said complaint required under the rules and regulations of said labor board were legally presented and filed.

Extensive hearings were had by said Labor Board thereunder, and at all of the said hearings duly and legally authorized representatives of all interested parties were present and participated therein; and the representatives of both the railroad companies and of the labor unions introduced before the Labor Board at said hearings a large amount of evidence relating to all the circumstances relevant to the questions presented by said complaint, among which were (1) the scales of wages paid for similar kinds of work in other industries; (2) the relation between wages and the cost of living; (3) the hazards of the employment; (4) the training and skill required; (5) the degree of responsibility; (6) the character and regularity of the employment; and (7) inequalities of increases in wages or of treatment, the result of previous wage orders or adjustments. And said Labor Board gave careful consideration to all facts and circumstances relating to all of said special matters, as well as to all other relevant facts and circumstances; and every opportunity was given at said hearings to both the railroad companies and said brotherhoods of railroad employees, each acting through their legally constituted representatives, to offer all the evidence they possessed or could procure concerning the aforesaid subjects and all other subjects pertinent to the matter under consideration; and said representatives of the railroad companies and the brotherhoods at said hearings presented to the Labor Board extended arguments wherein all the relative facts were carefully reviewed. After said hearings had been closed, the Labor Board continued the consideration of all relevant facts which had been presented to them by all parties concerned and of all circumstances and conditions relevant to the question whether the wages of said employees of the railroad companies should be reduced; and if so, to what extent; and on June 5, 1922, the Railroad Labor Board published its decision, No. 1036, effective July 1, 1922, wherein and whereby the Railroad Labor Board did determine, in accordance with the requirements of section 307 of said transportation act, the justness and reasonableness of the wages and salaries of members of the Federated Shop Crafts. Copy of decision No. 1036 is attached hereto, made a part thereof, and is marked "United States Exhibit No. 1." Said order was duly entered on the records of the proceedings of the Labor Board and was immediately communicated to the parties in dispute, to the President, to each adjustment board, and to the Interstate Commerce Commission, as required by said statute.

By the express provision of the aforesaid act of Congress the duty and power to hear said matter of dispute and determine whether the wages of the employees of said applicants should be reduced was vested in said labor board, and not only are all the parties to said hearings morally bound to observe the findings and the order based thereon, but said findings and order fixes the legal rights of all the parties to such proceedings; and neither of them has either the moral or the legal right to take any action to set them at naught or that may tend to prevent their observance, or to encourage their nonobservance by any or either of the parties or by any person or number of persons who were represented in said proceedings.

The railroad companies who were parties to said proceedings are public-service corporations whose charters were granted, and upon whom the right of eminent domain was conferred, in order that they might be enabled to perform functions vitally important to the public welfare; and each and all of them are continually engaged in the transportation of interstate and foreign commerce; and therefore the employees of said corporations, who as aforesaid were duly represented in said proceedings through their brotherhoods and by the proper officials or agents thereof, are likewise engaged in interstate and foreign commerce. The findings and order of the labor board not only created and declared a legal right as between the parties, but the general public and the Government of the United States are vitally interested in such an observance of said order as will prevent an interruption of such commerce. In fact the principal purpose for the creation of the labor board and the requirement that matters of dispute between transportation companies and their employees concerning wages and working conditions be submitted thereto, was to prevent an interference with interstate transportation, and the infliction upon the public of great inconvenience and damages arising from the interruption of such transportation in consequence of strikes brought about by disputes between companies engaged therein and their employees. And therefore the United States, acting for and on behalf of the public and through its proper official, that it may perform its proper functions and continue its necessary operations for the general welfare of the public, possesses the legal right to prevent an interruption of interstate transportation growing out of any failure to observe, or any complaint made of, said order by any of the parties to said proceedings.

V. Although, as above alleged, duly accorded a full hearing and submission of the dispute as provided by Title III, to which the defendants, through their duly accredited representatives, were parties and represented, immediately upon the promulgation of decision No. 1036, the defendants and all of them, acting through their hereinbefore-mentioned representatives and in concert, professing to be dissatisfied with decision No. 1036, conspired, combined, and confederated together, and agreed with each other and among themselves to repudiate, ignore, violate, disobey, and refuse to accept or to be bound by that decision, and to quit in a body and abandon the service and employment of the railway companies at one and the same time, and to sever their relations and connections therewith as employees or otherwise, all as an objection to, or as a protest against, and a contempt for decision No. 1036; and as a protest against, and a contempt for the Railroad Labor Board; and as a protest against, and a contempt for the United States and the Government thereof; and as an attempt to deprive the railway companies of the power and facilities with which to discharge their functions and obligations to the public, and also to coerce and compel the railway companies also to repudiate, ignore, violate, disobey, and refuse to accept or to be bound by decision No. 1036, and to that end the defendants, and all of them, acting through their hereinbefore-mentioned representatives and in concert, further conspired, combined, and confederated together, and agreed with each other and among themselves to issue and promulgate on or about June 29, 1922, a strike order to all of the members of Federated Shop Crafts and each of them through their respective organizations aforesaid, directing and requiring them to quit in a body and abandon the service and employment of the railway companies on July 1, 1922, at 10 o'clock a. m., and thereafter to absent themselves from such service and employment until such time as the railway companies should also repudiate, ignore, violate, disobey, and refuse to accept, comply with, or be bound by decision No. 1036, and consent to pay to the members of the Federated Shop Craft wages in excess of those prescribed by decision No. 1036, when they would return to such service and employment. The order so issued and promulgated was as follows:

"To all general chairmen and local lodge secretaries:

"In compliance with the strike vote all shop-craft employees below the rank of general foreman are hereby granted sanction to suspend work 10 a. m., July 1, on all railroads and Pullman shops in the United States. Notify all outside points. Wire number responding and number remaining at work."

Accordingly a large majority of the 400,000 members of the Federated Shop Crafts employed by the railway companies operating throughout the continental United States, some voluntarily acting on the directions of their hereinbefore-mentioned representatives, and others involuntarily coerced by such directions and in conspiracy, combination, confederation, and agreement with each other and among themselves, did, on July 1, 1922, at 10 o'clock a. m., purposely lay down their tools and walk out of the shops and did quit and abandon the service and employment of the respective railway companies by which they were employed, and they are now no longer in the service thereof and are nonemployed and idle. Pursuant to said conspiracy, combination, and confederation and agreement with each other and among themselves, and the strike order so issued and promulgated, and according to public statements of defendant Jewell, approximately 90 per cent of the members of Federated Shop Crafts have thus quit and abandoned the service and employment of the railway companies, thus purposely impairing the safety and efficiency of the entire transportation system of the continental United States. Such railway companies in many instances have been compelled to abandon the operation of many passenger and freight trains, with consequent inability and incapacity to carry the mails and to transport in interstate and foreign commerce food, fuel, and other necessaries and supplies for the immediate needs of the public, particularly in the large cities, the transportation of all of which has been and now is retarded, restrained, obstructed, and is seriously in danger of being utterly prevented.

VI. Under and by virtue of its power to regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, the Congress of the United States has imposed many duties and obligations upon the railway companies named in decision No. 1036, with respect to the continuous operations of the railroads, the equipment of locomotives, cars, and trains with specific forms of safety appliances and devices, and their continued maintenance and repair according to the prescribed standards and with respect to the transportation of live stock, all of which duties and obligations are respectfully imposed by special acts, to wit: (a) The act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and the various and sundry acts amendatory thereto and supplementary thereof, including the transportation act of 1920, approved February 28, 1920, wherein, among other things, such railway companies are required to provide and furnish transportation of freight and passengers in interstate and foreign commerce upon request, and to provide and furnish safe and adequate car service as that term is defined to include the supply, movement, distribution, exchange, interchange, and return of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles used in the transportation, including special types of equipment and the supply of trains; that the railway companies are subject to heavy penalties for failure to comply with the requirements of such acts, and the Interstate Commerce Commission may require the performance of such duties and obligations and award damages against such railway companies to any parties who may be injured by any breach of the duties and obligations thus imposed upon the railway companies; (b) the acts to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by requiring the railway companies to install various safety devices, being the act of March 2, 1893 (ch. 196, 27 Stat. 531); the act of March 2, 1903 (ch. 976, 32 Stat. 943); the act of April 14, 1910 (ch. 160, 36 Stat. 298); the locomotive ash pan act of May 30, 1908 (ch. 225, 35 Stat. 476); the locomotive boiler act of February 17, 1911 (ch. 103, 36 Stat. 913); and amending act of March 4, 1915 (ch. 168, 38 Stat. 1192); and other acts amendatory of the last aforesaid acts, wherein and whereby the Congress of the United States has legislated generally and specifically with respect to the installation, use, and maintenance of the many forms of safety appliances on the locomotives and car of the railway companies and the carriages of the mails, and has conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the general jurisdiction and authority to supervise the enforcement of such acts, together with the jurisdiction and authority to standardize the appliances; in pursuance thereof the commission has made and entered many orders and is now making and entering orders against the railway companies which are in duty bound to observe and obey with respect to the installation, use, repair, and maintenance of drawbars on freight cars, brakes, couplers, ladders, running boards, grab irons, handholds, boilers, ash pans, headlights, and other similar devices used on the locomotives and cars of the railway companies; that the railway companies are subject to and liable for the heavy penalties imposed by such acts for failure to comply with the standards of use, repair, and maintenance so prescribed either by such acts or by the Interstate Commerce Commission acting thereunder; and (c) the live-stock transportation act of June 29, 1906 (ch. 3594, 36 Stat 607); the live stock contagious diseases act of March 3, 1905 (ch. 1496, 33 Stat. 1264), and the animal industry act of May 29, 1884 (ch. 60, 23 Stat. 31), and other acts amendatory of the last aforesaid acts, wherein and whereby the Congress of the United States has required the railway companies to unload all live stock transported in interstate and foreign commerce at stated intervals for feed, water, and rest, to transport live stock with such continuous and expeditious service as to enable the railway companies to unload the same at appropriate yards for such feeding, watering, and resting, to comply with prescribed rules and regulations with respect to transportation of live stock affected with contagious or infectious diseases, and otherwise to conform to the standards prescribed by the Congress of the United States in the transportation of live stock with provisions for heavy fines and penalties for which the railway companies are liable in the event of their failure in all respects to comply with such acts.

Moreover, the railway companies mentioned in decision No. 1036, and each of them are, and during all the times hereinafter mentioned, were engaged and required by the United States, in many instances by special laws, to carry daily and regularly upon numerous trains the United States mails; that the railway companies have been and are required by the United States so to carry the mails continually and daily upon their regular passenger and mail trains upon certain terms and conditions are to continue so to do. Said railway companies are required to carry the mails at certain hours of the day and night and upon specified trains having definite hours of departure and arrival and with definite times fixed for deliveries. By acts of Congress the railway companies are post roads of the United States, and many of such railway companies are required at any and all times, or whenever occasion arises, to carry troops and military forces of the United States, and provisions, munitions, and general supplies therefor.

VII. The railway system of transportation owned and operated throughout the continental United States and the railroads are so placed as to reach and serve the territories wherein are mainly located the agricultural, horticultural, live stock, mining, manufacturing, and commercial industries of the Nation. The continued operation of all systems of railway transportation to full capacity in delivering the raw materials for and distributing the products of all such industries is vital to the health, comfort, peace, happiness, and the commercial prosperity of the people. The failure continually so to operate all of such systems of railway transportation as aforesaid for the purposes aforesaid or an extended and substantial enforcement of such transportation necessarily and quickly results in the cessation of the operation of such industries with consequent widespread lack of employment, idleness, shortage of food, fuel, and other necessities, discomfort, disease, want, dissatisfaction, and unrest among the people, particularly in the large cities.

Bituminous coal is the most important fuel consumed in the United States. It is used throughout the United States in the generation of steam and electricity for motive power, in the operation of railroads, steamboats, light, heating, and power plants, street car lines, factories, and industrial plants of all kinds, including all public utilities, and in the generation of heat in hotels, office buildings, apartment houses, and private dwellings for the purpose of protection against cold. It is mined and produced from the ground to the extent of approximately 500,000,000 net tons annually, in the aggregate, in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wyoming in varying amounts. However, the largest production is in the States of Pennsylvania, Illinois, and West Virginia. It is shipped and distributed from the mines in interstate commerce into all of the States of the United States for the above-described uses in the generation of heat and power, including the operation of the entire railway transportation system of the continental United States, with certain exceptions in the western and southwestern regions, where by a comparatively few railway companies fuel oil is used in part. There is now an acute coal shortage due to a practically complete suspension of mining operations since April 1, 1922. The period from the middle of June until the 1st of November of each year is the season for the harvest of wheat, corn, and other staple food products, fruits, and vegetables in the great agricultural districts, and of cotton in the Southern States. The marketing season of all of these products immediately following the harvest requires the prompt movement over a railway transportation system operated with a maximum of capacity and efficiency. If upon the early resumption of mining operations and the necessity for the movement to the market of the season's crops in order to save losses to the producers and to supply the purchasers and consumers is pressing, together with the necessity for the movement of the vast herds of live stock produced in the same regions and moving to the markets at the same time for slaughter and conversion into food products, the railway transportation system is broken down or impaired so as to be useless or inadequate for any and all emergencies, the entire Nation will become engulfed in a national disaster and the people thereof will be utterly unprovided with fuel and food in the face of winter.

VIII. The aforesaid simultaneous and concerted quitting and abandonment of the service of the railway companies by approximately 90 per cent of the 400,000 members of the Federated Shop Crafts in and of itself necessarily impairs forthwith the efficiency of the entire railway transportation system, and operates to restrain, hinder, delay, obstruct, and retard the transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mail. To restore such efficiency, to prevent further impairment thereof, and save such entire railway transportation system from complete breakdown new employees in equal numbers must immediately be placed in the service and trained. The several railway companies mentioned in decision No. 1036 have undertaken to replace and are now engaged in the replacement of the nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts who so purposely quit and abandoned the service with like kind of employees, or as nearly as may be. In the nature of things it was and is impossible for the railway companies mentioned in decision No. 1036 to secure, replace, and train so large a number of skilled employees within the short time necessary to prevent interference with and delay in the transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mail. Except for the unlawful acts hereinafter set forth the railway companies mentioned in decision No. 1036 could and would procure the required number of skilled employees to perform the service which the nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts thus quit and abandoned, and thus restore the hitherto high efficiency of the entire system of railway transportation, to prevent further impairment thereof, and to save such entire railway transportation system from complete breakdown, and to prevent restraint, hindrance, delay, and retarding of the transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mail.

IX. Well knowing the railway companies mentioned in decision No. 1036 are and will be unable to continue to transport passengers and property in interstate commerce and to carry the mail without an adequate force of skilled employees with which to maintain all rolling stock in a complete state of repair and in perfect running order; and well knowing the railway companies were without employees to perform such service except the members of the Federated Shop Crafts; and well knowing that after the aforesaid quitting and abandonment of the service and employment by the members of the Federated Shop Crafts the railway companies would shortly be utterly and wholly unable to transport passengers and property in interstate commerce and to carry the mail; and well knowing that the transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mail would be restrained, hindered, delayed, obstructed, and retarded unless the railway companies were permitted to and did engage and employ other persons to replace the nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts who so quit and abandoned the service; and well knowing that if left peaceably alone and unmolested the railway companies forthwith would be able to and would employ other skilled persons possessing the necessary experience and training to enable them to perform the required service to maintain all rolling stock and equipment in a complete state of repair and in perfect running order; and well knowing that large numbers of such persons were desirous of and ready to enter into the employment of the railway companies for the performance of such service; and well knowing that if such persons were permitted to and did enter into such employment of the railway companies for the performance of such service defendants would be unable to coerce the railway companies into violating, ignoring, and repudiating decision No. 1036, the defendants did unlawfully conspire, combine, and confederate and agree with each other and among themselves as nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts, and with other persons, to hinder and prevent the railway companies from hiring, engaging, and employing such other skilled and qualified persons who are willing to enter the service and employment and to perform the service of maintaining all rolling stock in a complete state of repair and perfect running order; and to prevent such other persons from entering and engaging in such service or employment, and to cause such members of the Federated Shop Crafts who continued in the service and employment and who loyally accept and complied with decision No. 1036, and who have refused to quit and abandon the service and employment, but still continue therein, to leave such service and employment; and to wholly deprive the railway companies of the forces and facilities with which to maintain all rolling stock in a complete state of repair and in perfect running order, and thus to hinder, delay, obstruct, and retard the transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mail.

X. In pursuance of said unlawful conspiracy, combination, agreement, and arrangement agreed upon by the defendants, and to carry same into effect and to accomplish the purposes thereof as aforesaid, the defendants, Jewell, McGrath, Scott, Johnston, Noonan, Kline, Hynes, Franklin, and Ryan, members of the executive council of the railway employees' department of the American Federation of Labor, on or about June 27, 1922, published and circulated, and caused to be published and circulated, among all of the officers and members of said Federated Shop Crafts a letter dated June 27, 1922, which is attached hereto and marked "United States Exhibit No. 2"; and further in pursuance of said unlawful conspiracy, combination, agreement, and arrangement agreed upon by the defendants, and to accomplish the purposes thereof, and since the quitting and abandonment of the services and employment of the railway companies by the members of the Federated Shop Crafts, as aforesaid, on July 1, 1922, the defendants, Jewell, McGrath, Scott, Johnston, Noonan, Kline, Hynes, Franklin, and Ryan, have issued and circulated, and caused to be issued and circulated, instructions, directions, orders, and suggestions, in writing, by telegraph, telephone, word of mouth, published statements, and otherwise, to and among the said officers and nonemployed and idle members of Federated Shop Crafts of the same tenor and effect as United States Exhibit No. 2, directing the officers and nonemployed and idle members to picket the shops, yards, premises, and property of the railway companies, and the streets and avenues in the vicinity thereof, and the ways of ingress and egress thereto and therefrom, and to prevent the railway companies from securing and having a sufficient number of employees at all times to inspect, overhaul, and repair all of their rolling stock and equipment and at all times to maintain the same in a complete state of repair and in proper running order. Defendants, and each of them, are continuing, and unless restricted by a court's fiat will still continue, so to issue, publish, and circulate such instructions, orders, directions, and suggestions to the members and officers aforesaid.

XI. In carrying into effect the aforesaid unlawful conspiracy, combination, confederation, agreement, and arrangement, the defendants have caused the shops, yards, premises, and property of the railway companies and the streets and avenues in the vicinity thereof, and the ways of ingress and egress thereto and therefrom, to be picketed by large numbers or groups of nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts, which picketing is conducted by importuning in a threatening, violent, and offensive manner, and with violence and threats of further violence and with personal injuries inflicted and threats of further personal injuries to be inflicted on the officers and employees of the railway companies, including particularly the members of the Federated Shop Crafts who have refused to quit and abandon the service and employment of the railway companies, and upon other persons who have entered the service and employment of the railway companies to replace and to perform the service and employment which the nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts refused to perform, and other persons who desire to accept such employment and to perform such service. In pursuance of such unlawful conspiracy, combination, confederation, agreement, and arrangement defendants and each of them, by themselves and through their representatives and agents, are and have been continuously and persistently endeavoring and attempting, by importuning, intimidation, violence, and threats of further violence, bodily injuries, and threats of further bodily injuries, danger to life and property, and threats of further danger to life and property, and other acts of terrorism, and by such unlawful picketing and other forms of lawlessness, to put in fear, hinder, and obstruct persons seeking employment with the railway companies for the performance of the service of maintaining all rolling stock and equipment in a complete state of repair and in perfect running order from entering such service and employment; and by opprobrious epithets, intimidation, and use of physical force and violence and other forms of lawlessness, to drive and coerce all such employees to quit and abandon their service and employment. By order, procurance, and direction of the defendants, conspiring, combining, confederating, agreeing, and arranging together as aforesaid, persons contemplating and desiring to accept employment with the railway companies are met and accosted at the shops, yards, premises, and property of the railway companies and on the streets and avenues in the vicinity thereof and on the ways of ingress and egress thereto and therefrom by nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts; and by unfounded conversations and arguments, importuning, threats of violence, intimidation, and other forms of lawlessness are prevented and prohibited from entering or further considering employment by the railway companies who are thus deprived of the right and opportunity to bargain with, engage, and hire employees to maintain all rolling stock and equipment in a complete state of repair and in perfect running order.

All of the nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts who so quit and abandoned the service and employment of the railway companies as aforesaid, by direction of the defendants in their conspiracy, combination, confederation, agreement, and arrangement are required to and do devote their time, except as they have been heretofore restrained from so doing by injunctions issued in some districts on bills filed by railroad companies, to picketing the shops, yards, premises, and property of the railway companies and the streets and avenues in the vicinity thereof and the ways of ingress and egress thereto and therefrom for the purpose of preventing the railway companies from procuring or acquiring the necessary employees for the maintenance of all rolling stock and equipment in a complete state of repair and in a perfect running order, and inducing and procuring those employees who refused to quit and abandon the service now to quit and abandon the same. By the aforesaid methods and unlawful acts the defendants have caused many of the employees who refused and failed to comply with and obey the order to quit and abandon on July 1, 1922, the service and employment of the railway companies since to quit and abandon such service and employment. They have also thus prevented and prohibited still other persons seeking such service and employment and who are ready, able, and willing to perform the same from entering the service and employment of such railway companies. The latter are without and have been unable to acquire and keep a sufficient number of employees to operate their shops to full capacity at all times for the maintenance of all rolling stock and equipment in a complete state of repair and in running order. Freight and passenger trains to the aggregate of several hundred have already been necessarily discontinued and abandoned. Under such circumstances the entire rolling stock and equipment will so rapidly deteriorate that within a comparatively short time it may be completely broken down, and the transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage and handling of the mail may be completedly restrained, hindered, delayed, obstructed, and retarded.

XII. The purpose and intent of the defendants and each of them and their associates in conspiring, combining, confederating, agreeing, and arranging together to cause the members of the Federated Shop Crafts who have failed to quit and abandon the service and employment now to quit and abandon the service and employment of the railway companies as aforesaid; and to prevent the railway companies from hiring or employing persons to replace the nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts, and to prevent the railway companies from having in their service a sufficient number of men to inspect, overhaul, and repair the locomotives and cars, and at all times to keep all of the rolling stock and equipment in a complete state of repair and proper running order; and of committing the unlawful acts aforesaid in pursuance of the unlawful conspiracy, combination, confederation, agreement, and arrangement, was and is to delay, restrain, obstruct, and retard transportation in interstate commerce on the lines of all of the railway companies operating throughout the continental United States; and wholly to obstruct and prevent transportation or movement of any passengers or property whatever in interstate and foreign commerce and the carriage of the mail, in the event the railway companies should recognize and obey and shall continue to recognize and obey decision No. 1036, and should continue to refuse to be forced or coerced into acceding to the unlawful demands of the nonemployed and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts, and agree to pay to them wages in excess of the wages found to be just and reasonable by the Railroad Labor Board.

The defendants' aforesaid unlawful conduct is still continuing with constantly and rapidly increasing activity and persistence, and now extends to practically every locality where the railway companies, or any of them, maintain repair shops or yards. Although the said railway companies have in some localities and in many instances invoked the protection of the United States courts, and although many injunctions have been issued and served on the offending officers and members of the Federated Shop Crafts enjoining the unlawful acts hereinbefore referred to, all of such efforts have been and are inadequate in many localities to break up and accomplish the abandonment of such unlawful acts. To effectually end this nation-wide conspiracy against the functions and operation of the Federal Government it is necessary that the defendants herein who have directed and are now directing, and all others who participate in the direction of such conspiracy, be enjoined from so doing.

The aforesaid conspiracy, combination, confederation, agreement, and arrangement and the aforesaid unlawful acts committed in pursuance thereof constitute and are a violation of the provisions of section 1 of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" (28 Stat. 209), known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, and the aforesaid transportation act of 1920.

XIII. The defendants and each of them and the officers and the nonemployees and idle members of the Federated Shop Crafts are still engaged in such unlawful conspiracy, combination, confederation, agreement, and arrangement and are still engaged in doing the aforesaid acts complained of and each of them.

As the result of said unlawful conduct of the defendants approximately a thousand mail trains are now discontinued; thousands of loaded freight care are and have been for weeks standing upon sidetracks, of which the greater number have been purposely and maliciously disabled to prevent them from being used in the transportation of coal and other commerce; thousands of disabled locomotives stand idle in the yards; the operation of numerous factories in all parts of the country are suspended for the want of fuel and material and facilities for the transportation of their products; and thousands of the employees of such factories are deprived of an opportunity to earn support for themselves and their families. In addition to all this the vicious element of the striking employees and those who despise all governmental authority have seized upon the situation to create, so far as they are able to do so, a reign of terror by dynamiting railroad bridges, removing spikes from rails, placing obstructions upon railway tracks, exploding bombs on tracks and in railroad yards, and hurling bombs at moving trains for the purpose not only of impeding and hindering the transportation of passengers and freight but of deterring by fear the trainmen from operating trains and passengers from riding thereon. That the court may have some comprehension of the extent of the lawlessness existing which has arisen from the conditions brought about by the unlawful activities of the defendants, there is attached hereto and marked as "United States Exhibit No. 3" a statement of the acts of depredation, a large proportion of which are criminal, that have been committed pursuant to and as a result of said unlawful conspiracy and reported to the Department of Justice.

Unless restrained and enjoined by this court, defendants will continue their unlawful conduct, and the conditions of lawlessness heretofore described will become more appalling.

XIV. By the express provisions of the act of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, it is made the imperative duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, acting under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain all violations of said act. Furthermore, it is the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to see that all laws of the United States are enforced which are for the protection of the public, and this applies with special force to those laws and rights of parties fixed by governmental bodies, which can not be enforced or are difficult of enforcement by action brought by private citizens. Such power is vested in the Attorney General by the direct and implied provisions contained in the statutes creating and defining the duties of his office and of the Department of Justice. All power relating to the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce is vested by the Constitution in the Congress of the United States, and it is especially the duty of the Attorney General to see that said provision of the Constitution and all congressional legislation based thereon be enforced, and that all findings and orders of bodies created by Congress for the purpose of preserving the free and unhampered flow of interstate and foreign commerce be observed.

Forasmuch, therefore, as the United States is without remedy save in a court of equity, and to the end that defendants, Railway Employees' Department of the American Federation of Labor, Bert M. Jewell, president; J. F. McGrath, vice president; and John Scott, secretary and treasurer thereof, as such officers, respectively, and their successors in office, also as individuals and as representatives of all of the members thereof; International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers and James W. Kline, president thereof, as such president and his successor in office, also individually and as representative of all of the members thereof; International Alliance of Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers and J. and each of them, and all persons who may now or hereafter conspire, combine, confederate, agree, and arrange with them, whose names are to the complainant unknown, all of whom are made parties defendant to this bill of complaint, may be required to make full and complete answer, but not under oath, answer under oath being hereby expressly waived; and complainant prays:

(1) That such defendants, and each of them, and each and all of their attorneys, servants, agents, associates, members, employees, and all persons acting in aid of or in conjunction with them, be enjoined and restrained primarily until final hearing hereon, and perpetually thereafter, from—

(a) In any manner interfering with, hindering, or obstructing said railway companies, or any of them, their agents, servants, or employees, in the operation of their respective railroads and systems of transportation or the performance of their public duties and obligations in the transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mail, and from in any way interfering with, hindering, or obstructing the agents, servants, and employees of said railway companies, or any of them, engaged in the inspection, repair, operation, and use of trains, locomotives, cars, and other equipment of said railway companies, or any of them, and from preventing or attempting to prevent any person or persons from freely entering into or continuing in the employment of said railway companies, or any of them, for the inspection and repairing of locomotives and cars, or otherwise;

(b) In any manner conspiring, combining, confederating, agreeing, and arranging with each other, or with any other person or persons, organizations, or associations to injure or interfere with or hinder said railway companies, or any of them, in the conduct of their lawful business of transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mail; or to injure, interfere with, hinder, or annoy any employee of said railway companies, or any of them, in connection with the performance of their duties as such employees or while going to or returning from the premises of said railway companies in connection with their said employment, or at any time or place, by displays of force or numbers, the making of threats, intimidation, acts of violence, opprobrious epithets, jeers, suggestions of danger, taunts, entreaties, or other unlawful acts or conduct toward any employee or employees or officers of said railway companies, or any of them, or toward persons desirous of or contemplating entering into such employment;

(c) Loitering or being unnecessarily in the vicinity of the points and places of ingress or egress of the employees of said railway companies, to and from such premises, in connection with their said employment; or aiding, abetting, directing, or encouraging any person or persons, organization, or association, by letters, telegrams, telephone, word of mouth, or otherwise to do any of the acts aforesaid; trespassing, entering, or going upon the premises of the said railway companies, or any of them, to do any of the acts aforesaid, or for any other purpose whatsoever, at any place or in the vicinity of any place where the employees of said companies, or any of them, are engaged in inspecting, overhauling, or repairing locomotives, cars, or other equipment, or where such employees customarily perform such duties or at any other place on the premises of said railway companies, or any of them, except where the public generally are invited to come to transact business with said railway companies as common carriers of passengers and property in interstate commerce.

(d) Inducing or attempting to induce by the use of threats, violent or abusive language, opprobrious epithets, physical violence or threats thereof, intimidations, display of numbers or force, jeers, entreaties, argument, persuasion, rewards, or otherwise, any person or persons to abandon the employment of said railway companies, or any of them, or to refrain from entering such employment.

(e) Engaging, directing, or encouraging others to engage in the practice commonly known as picketing; that is to say, assembling or causing to be assembled numbers of the members of said Federated Shop Crafts or others in sympathy with them in proximity of said railway companies, or any of them, at or in the vicinity where the employees thereof are required to work and perform their duties, or at or near the places of ingress or egress thereto or therefrom, and by threats, persuasions, jeers, violent or abusive language, violence or threats of violence, taunts, entreaties or argument, or in any other way prevent or attempt to prevent any of the employees of said railway companies, or any of them, from entering upon or continuing in their duties as such employees, or so to prevent, or attempt to prevent, any person or persons from entering or continuing in the employment of said railway companies, or any of them, and from aiding, abetting, ordering, assisting, directing, or encouraging in any way any person or persons in the commission of any of said acts.

(f) Congregating upon or directing, aiding, or encouraging the congregating upon, or maintaining at or near any of the yards, shops, depots, terminals, tracks, way lands, roadbeds, or premises of said railway companies, or any of them, any guards, pickets, or persons to perform any act of guarding, picketing, or patroling any such yards, shops, depots, terminals, or other premises of said railway companies, or any of them, and in any manner threaten, intimidate, by suggestions of danger or personal violence toward any servant or employee of said companies, or any of them, or toward persons contemplating the entering of such employment, or aiding, encouraging, directing, or causing any other person or persons so to do.

(g) Doing or causing, or in any manner conspiring, combining, directing, commanding, or encouraging the doing or causing the doing by any person or persons of any injury or bodily harm to any of the servants, agents, or employees of said railway companies, or any of them; going singly or collectively to the homes, abodes, or places of residence of any employee of the said railway companies, or any of them, for the purpose of intimidating, threatening, or coercing such employee or member of his family, or in any manner by violence or threats of violence, or otherwise directed toward any said employee or member of his family, induce or attempt to induce such employee to refuse to perform his duties as an employee of said railway companies, or any of them; from so attempting to prevent any person or persons from entering the employ of either of said railway companies and from aiding, encouraging, directing, commanding, or causing any person or persons so to do.

(h) In any manner directly or indirectly hindering, obstructing, or impeding the operation of any of the trains of said railway companies, or any of them, in the movement and transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce or in the carriage of the mail, or in the performance of any other duty as common carriers, and from aiding, abetting, causing, encouraging, or directing any person or persons, association or organization to do or cause to be done any of the matters or things aforesaid.

(i) In any manner by letters, printed or other circulars, telegrams, telephone, word of mouth, oral persuasion, or suggestion, or through interviews to be published in newspapers or otherwise in any manner whatsoever encourage, direct, or command any person, whether a member of any or either of said labor organizations or associations defendants herein, or otherwise, to abandon the employment of said railway companies, or any of them, or to refrain from entering the service of said railway companies, or either of them.

2. The said defendants—Jewell, McGrath, Scott, Johnston, Noonan, Kline, Ryan, Franklin, and Hynes, and each of them, as officers as aforesaid and as individuals—be restrained and enjoined from—

(a) Issuing any instructions, requests, public statements, or suggestions in any way to any defendant herein or to any official or members of any said labor organizations constituting the said Federated Shop Crafts, or to any official or member of any system federation thereof with reference to their conduct or the acts they shall perform subsequent to the abandonment of the employment of said railway companies by the members of the said Federated Shop Crafts, or for the purpose of or to induce any such officials or members or any other persons whomsoever to do or say anything for the purpose or intended or calculated to cause any employee of said railway companies, or any of them, to abandon the employment thereof, or to cause any persons to refrain from entering the employment thereof to perform duties in aid of the movement and transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mails.

(b) Using, causing, or consenting to the use of any of the funds or moneys of said labor organizations in aid of or to promote or encourage the doing of any of the matters or things hereinbefore complained of.

3. That the complainant may have such other and further relief in the premises as the nature of the case may require and to your honor shall seem meet.

4. That a writ of subpœna issue directed to the said defendants and each of them and running to the districts of their residence or wherever they may be found, commanding them and each of them on a day certain to appear and answer this bill of complaint, but not under oath, answer under oath being expressly waived, and to abide by and perform such order and decree as the court may make in the premises.

5. That a temporary restraining order may be issued herein restraining the said defendants and each of them in accordance with the prayer for a preliminary and perpetual injunction pending a hearing on said application for a preliminary injunction; that said temporary restraining order may be served on each of the said defendants named; and that as to those unknown and unnamed defendants such temporary restraining order may be ordered and decreed to be and to become effective and binding upon such unknown and unnamed defendants immediately upon the receipt or acquisition of notice of knowledge thereof; and that for the purpose of bringing notice or knowledge thereof to such unknown and unnamed defendants the said temporary restraining order be ordered and directed to be published and posted in such manner and in such places and at such times as the court may direct, and that immediately upon the posting or publishing of such temporary restraining order in any locality on any of the said lines of railroad where employees are accustomed to perform the work of inspection and repair of the locomotives, cars, or other equipment, all such unknown and unnamed defendants in such locality shall be deemed to have notice and knowledge thereof and become bound thereby.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, ss:

Charles F. Clyne, being duly sworn, says that he is the United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois, and that he has read the foregoing bill of complaint and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true of his own knowledge except as to matters therein stated on his information and belief, and as to those matters he believes them to be true. He further states that he is authorized to sign the said bill of complaint for the United States of America, the complainant therein, by the Attorney General of the United States.

Attorney of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

Subscribed in my presence and sworn to before me this — day of ———, A. D. 1922.

CHICAGO, September 1.

After impressing upon the court the importance and necessity of this proceeding, outlining the strike situation since its inception, and stating in detail various acts of outlawry and depredation on part of defendants or their members, the Attorney General concluded his remarks as follows:

"The United States Government, through the Attorney General, in order to carry on the functions of the Government, has filed this bill of complaint and now asks for a temporary restraining order against all of the defendants. It is with great regret that I am compelled to institute this proceeding on behalf of the Government. Considering existing conditions and the welfare of the people of America there is no other course, and under the circumstances I have not the slightest fear or doubt of the Government's position.

"When the parties interested in the dispute which was decided by the Labor Board found that they could not by negotiations between themselves agree upon any plan by way of adjustment of their differences, at the request of both sides an appeal was made to the President of the United States to contribute his good offices to bring about a settlement. No man, officially or unofficially, in undertaking to bring about an adjustment which would prevent the necessity of this proceeding and prevent possibly more severe action on the part of the Government, ever displayed a more marvelous patience, a more deep-seated interest or conscientious application to any task in the interest of any people than was exhibited by the President of the United States in this effort.

"The President at one time, after many conferences with the representatives of both sides, and when he hoped and believed he had assurances from both sides involved in the dispute that a certain proposition would be accepted, made the proposition to the executives of the railroads and the officers of the Federated Shop Crafts which was ultimately rejected in part by the railroads.

"That proposition was made because the President knew that two strikes—one which practically prevented the production of coal in this country and the other which materially crippled transportation and interstate commerce, causing hardship and loss and suffering to the people—were in progress and his first consideration was in the people's interest and the public welfare.

"After the rejection of the first proposal the President made a second proposition, acting as mediator. The Federated Shop Crafts, through its representatives, the defendants named in this bill, rejected the second proposition. Negotiations for a compromise have since continued between the railway executives and the officers of the Shop Crafts, with frequent conferences by both with the President, and all without avail.

"In the meantime the equipment of the railroad companies is so materially affected by acts of vandalism and inattention that the service of the companies is generally seriously impaired, and in some instances the railroads have abandoned the running of trains altogether.

"On August 11 the President issued a proclamation calling upon the defendants and their associates to return to the service, to observe the decision of the Labor Board, and in any event not to interfere with the service, and not to interfere with men who are willing to enter or continue in the service.

"The Railroad Labor Board is an agency of the Government of the United States. In this particular contest both parties submitted the difference in dispute to the regularly constituted governmental authority to hear disputes and render decisions thereon. The railroads were willing to comply with the decision which was the cause of the strike, but the defendants not only repudiated the decision, but repudiated the Labor Board and its authority and hold the Labor Board and the Government of the United States in contempt.

"The President in his message to Congress on August 18, 1922, laying this entire matter before the Congress of the United States in connection with the coal strike, very truthfully said:

"'The Government can have no chart for its course except the law. These conditions can not remain in free America. If free men can not toil according to their own lawful choosing, all our constitutional guaranties born of democracy are surrendered to mobocracy and the freedom of a hundred millions is surrendered to the small minority which would have no law.

"'There are statutes forbidding conspiracy to hinder interstate commerce. There are laws to assure the highest possible safety in railway service. It is my purpose to invoke these laws, civil and criminal, against all offenders alike. The legal safeguarding against like menaces in the future must be worked out when no passion sways, when no prejudice influences, when the whole problem may be appraised, and the public welfare may be asserted against any and every interest which assumes authority beyond that of the Government itself.

"'We must reassert the doctrine that in this Republic the first obligation and the first allegiance of every citizen, high or low, is to his Government, and to hold that Government to be the just and unchallenged sponsor for public welfare, and the liberty, security, and rights of all its citizens. No matter what clouds may gather, no matter what storms may ensue, no matter what hardships may attend, or what sacrifice may be necessary, government by law must and will be sustained.

"'Wherefore I am resolved to use all the power of the Government to maintain transportation and sustain the right of men to work.'

"I do not appear here as a representative of the railroads; I appear here by virtue of law requiring me to do so, representing the Government of the United States and the people of the United States. The Government of the United States will never lift its hand against or touch a torch to the welfare of labor in its legitimate pursuit or to deny it what it is entitled to. The United States could not have been developed but for labor. Without that which labor produces the people of the United States can not be prosperous or achieve, and, in fact, they can not live.

"To-morrow it will be said by some persons, more malicious than truthful, that this proceeding is intended as a deathblow to the union; and, inasmuch as a falsehood travels twice as fast as the truth, let me to-day start the truth on its way in advance—that in my judgment this movement is necessary for the protection and the preservation of the unions themselves.

"The Government of the United States is not opposed to labor unions if they perform such functions as can be performed in lawful America. Never, while the labor unions limit their activities to legitimate acts and lawful pursuits not injurious to society, at least while I speak and to the extent that I can speak for the Government of the United States, shall a blow be struck at them.

"But it may be understood that so long and to the extent that I can speak for the Government of the United States, I will use the power of the Government of the United States within my control to prevent the labor unions of the country from destroying the open shop. When a man in this country is not permitted to engage in lawful toil whether he belongs to a union or not, with full protection and without interruption, the death knell to liberty will be sounded and anarchy will supersede organized government.

"There are many who believe, on account of the arrogance of certain officials of labor unions, that the unions themselves should be destroyed. I do not think they should, but I think they should be corrected and restrained.

"If the acts of violence and murder are inspired by the unions, then it is time for the Government to call a halt. No organization or association no matter how well organized or how powerful it may be can hold its constitution or its laws supreme over the Government, the Constitution, and the laws of the United States of America. No union or combination of unions can, under our laws, dictate to the American Union. When the unions claim the right to dictate to the Government and to dominate the American people and deprive the American people of the necessities of life, then the Government will destroy the unions, for the Government of the United States is supreme and must endure.

"No labor leader or capitalistic leader, no organization or association of any kind or kinds or combination of the same will be permitted by the Government of the United States to laugh in the frozen faces of a famishing people without prompt prosecution and proper punishment.

"There is ample authority in the laws of this country to support the court in the issuance of the restraining order prayed for in this proceeding. All modern decisions support the authority of the Government laid down more exhaustively and forcefully in the Debs case (158 U. S. 564) than probably in any other particular case decided by any court. In that case many of the serious offenses complained of in the case at bar were involved. Mr. Justice Brewer soundly pronounced the law of this country to be:

"'The complaint filed in this case clearly shows an existing obstruction of artificial highways for the passage of interstate commerce and the transmission of the mails, not only temporarily existing, but threatening to continue, and under it the circuit court had power to issue its process of injunction.

"'The Government of the United States has jurisdiction over every foot of soil within its territory, and acts directly upon each citizen.

"'While it may be competent for the Government through the executive branch and in the use of the entire executive power of the Nation to forcibly remove all such obstructions'—obstruction placed upon highways, natural or artificial, to obstruct the passage of interstate commerce, or the carrying of the mails—'it is equally within its competency to appeal to the civil courts for an inquiry and determination as to the existence and the character of any of them, and if such are found to exist or threaten to occur, to invoke the powers of those courts to remove or restrain them, the jurisdiction of courts to interfere in such matters by injunction being recognized from ancient times and by indubitable authority.'

"The right to work in this country is as sacred as the right not to be compelled to work, if a man is not disposed to do so, and every man must be made equally secure in his choice. I take notice of the fact that in the legislative branch of the Government the situation is deemed so serious that the taking over of the railroads by the Government is considered necessary. I do not believe that time has yet come. The Government has not reached the point where it will admit its inability to protect the rightful owners of property in their right to use that property for the general welfare of the whole people, and to require the owners of the railroads to furnish that service which is essential to the life of commerce, to the life of industry, to human life, and even to the very life of the Government itself.

"These defendants, considering the temperament of the people of the United States, can do no wiser or more beneficial thing for union labor than to consent that this temporary restraining order, if it should be granted by the court, be made permanent.

"I am not in this capacity before this honorable court pleading any cause of the railroads as their advocate, except as may be necessary to the welfare of the American people. The railroads are built under pledge to operate their lines. Representing the American people in this proceeding, I demand that the operation of the railroads shall not be interrupted in the service the Government requires them to perform.

"This dispute between the employers and employees is not involved in this proceeding. We have passed beyond that point. A governmental body entitled to recognition and obedience has decided that dispute. I am not taking sides between the disputants at this time as an advocate of either. It so happens in this instance that the railroads are willing to render the service the Government requires they shall render. They are trying to serve the American people. They are trying to observe the law. They are endeavoring to furnish transportation. On the other hand the defendants are preventing transportation and are offending against the law, as alleged in this bill, and by acts of violence are antagonizing and opposing the Government of the United States.

"The Government lays its hand on rich and poor alike when they do not obey the law, and if the Government fails to follow out that policy, the Government itself fails to obey the law.

"I had hoped this controversy would not come to this point. I had hoped both parties would abide by the decision of the Labor Board.

"Shall the American people suffer; shall property be destroyed; shall commerce be destroyed; shall laws be broken; shall society be disorganized; shall prosperity and all labor cease and the poor be in want because employers and employees engaged in interstate commerce, obligated to the Government and to the people of the United States, by a greater obligation than that which rests upon any other set of men in the country, because of a dispute between them refuse to obey the law? The answer is by the Government, that if they can not agree others will be given the privilege and protection of performing this service who will agree with the Government and obey the laws of Government.

"I had hoped, as all men who have the welfare of the Government and the welfare of the people at heart had hoped, that we would not come to this. Warnings since the foundation of the Government have been given. Washington, in his farewell address, anticipated this cloud when he said:

"'All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency.

"'However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.'

"But even though this widespread violence, this destruction of property, this threatening of starvation, and the hazarding and taking of human life as set forth in this complaint and situation were not present, no organization, no matter what its purpose or how powerful its plans and pursuits, can interfere with government and interstate commerce.

"As announced by the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Thomas v. Cincinnati Railway Co. (62 Fed. 803), when he was a justice of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals: 'Certainly the starvation of the Nation can not be a lawful purpose of a combination, and it is utterly immaterial whether the purpose is effected by means which are lawful or otherwise.'

"If the court please, the situation as set forth in this bill and as supported by proof presented and the condition of this country and of this service, the acts of these defendants and those inspired by them and conspiring with them, makes this proceeding necessary and justifies and makes necessary the application of the Government for a temporary restraining order, and such proceedings thereafter depending upon the acts of the defendants and those associated with them; and upon further hearing the Government will present additional proof of the increased and increasing necessity for a firm and positive stand on behalf of the Government against the things complained of in this bill.

"The underlying principle involved in this situation and this action is the survival and the supremacy of the Government of the United States."

REDUCTION IN RANK OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 12493) amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the bill which has just come over from the House is an exact duplicate of Senate bill 3970, which was reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs and is now upon the Senate Calendar. In view of that situation I ask unanimous consent that the House bill may be now taken up without reference to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It may shorten the procedure if I am permitted to describe just what the bill does. It can be stated in a few sentences.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator wants to have the bill passed to-night?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am inclined to think I agree with the Senator from New York, but I do not think we ought to pass a bill of this importance without hearing it read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to having it read. I thought, possibly, I could explain it quicker than it could be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President, upon the recommendation of the board of general officers convened to carry out the elimination provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1922, is authorized to determine the number of officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel that shall be discharged and recommissioned in the next lower grade notwithstanding the limitation of 800 in said act: Provided, That the President is authorized, upon the recommendation of said board, to increase the authorized strength of various grades as prescribed in said act by not more than 50 colonels, 150 majors, and 300 captains, and to decrease by a total of not to exceed 500, apportioned among the grades as the President may determine, the authorized strength of the two lowest grades as prescribed by said act: Provided further, That on and after January 1, 1923, there shall be not to exceed a total of 12,000 officers in the Army, and on and after that date the authorized number in each grade shall be as prescribed in said act or as modified and prescribed by the President in accordance with the provisions of the preceding proviso, and on that date there shall not be any promotion-list officers in any grade in addition to these prescribed numbers: Provided further, That the discharge and recommission of officers in the next lower grade shall not operate to reduce the pay or allowances which they are now receiving or to deprive them of credit for service now counted for purposes of pay or retirement: And provided further, That in discharging and recommissioning officers in inverse order of standing on the promotion list any officer who is once discharged from the grade he now holds and is recommissioned in the next lower grade shall be passed over.

SEC. 2. That the retired general officers who have been called to active duty for service on the said elimination board shall be entitled from date of detail and while so serving to the active pay and allowances of their grade.

SEC. 3. That the first proviso under the heading "Arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., for field service, National Guard" in title 1 of said act is amended to read as follows: "That members of the National Guard and Officers' Reserve Corps who have or shall become entitled for a continuous period of less than one month to Federal pay at the rates fixed for the Regular Army, whether by virtue of a call by the President, of attendance at school or maneuver, or of any other cause, and whose accounts have not yet been settled, shall receive such pay for each day of such period; and the 31st day of a calendar month shall not be excluded from the computation."

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws in so far as they are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the bill (S. 3970) amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, September 2, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 1, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. We believe that the impulse we have to offer Thee daily our praise and gratitude is inspired by Thy Spirit. It is Thy creation, for we are Thy children. Enable us to covet zealously the best things; to treasure them up and love them. May we set ourselves with happy hearts, glad faces, and new desires toward this day. In every relationship may we be wise men and beneficent servants of our Republic. O lift the sick to Thy arms and give them rest and health, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of branch banks, and also on the subject of the need of the adoption of a comprehensive rural credits system.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subjects indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume these are the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Absolutely.

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

BRANCH BANKING.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, a condition has arisen which menaces the existence of the independent banking system of our country, and which if permitted to continue, in my opinion, will result eventually in the destruction of the best friend the farmer and country business man have—the country banker of the present day.

There has been for some years a growing disposition on the part of some of the larger banks to encroach upon the business of the smaller financial institutions by the establishment of branches or "feeders," as we might term them. This has been accomplished to a large extent by the acquisition of control of smaller banks by the larger banks through purchase; but recently some of the large national banks have sought authority from the Comptroller of the Currency to establish branches, particularly in States which permit State banks to establish branches, giving as a reason the fact that they could not successfully compete with the State banks in those States, and when denied this authority it resulted in many national banks surrendering their charters and converting into State banks in order that they might avail themselves of the authority granted by the State to maintain branches.

This condition is deplorable, and to add to the gravity of the situation a large national bank in one of our Missouri cities—which State does not permit branch banking—has recently announced a policy of establishing a number of "branch offices" throughout that city.

It is, of course, well understood that the adoption of this policy would eventually result in the practice being extended to the rural communities. When some city bank failed to secure a correspondent in a desirable town, the next step would be to establish a branch bank in that community, then some other city bank, not willing to be outdone, would do likewise until in due time the State would be plastered with branch banks.

It is said that the bank referred to above takes the position that it does not require the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency; claiming the inherent right under its charter to pursue its announced policy.

If the Comptroller of the Currency permits this bank to continue this policy, it is self-evident that many other large banks will avail themselves of the same privilege, resulting very soon in an era of branch banking.

The Attorney General of Missouri has sought by injunction to prevent the bank referred to from carrying out its announced policy, after, however, it had already established one branch and was preparing to open a second one.

More than eleven hundred banks in Missouri have formed an Association of Missouri Banks and Trust Companies opposed to Branch Banking, and are seeking necessary legislation from Congress to accomplish their worthy object.

Having been a country banker for more than a quarter of a century, during which time I have been intimately associated with the country bankers of my State, and during all of which time I have been in daily contact with the farmers and business men, I feel that I am well qualified to speak upon the merits of this proposition.

Mr. Speaker, the banks in the agricultural sections of Missouri are owned by the farmers and business men of their respective communities; their affairs are administered by boards of directors composed of these same farmers and business men who are the financial bulwarks of their localities.

These country banks are officered by men who have risen to leadership in their communities through years of faithful and intelligent service rendered to their patrons, and these patrons have learned to rely on their good judgment and counsel in all matters.

Picture to yourself a condition in the future which would necessitate these worthy people coming to some young clerk sent out by a city bank to administer the affairs of their branch bank for counsel in their financial affairs. The very idea is preposterous.

There must be some reason for this desire upon the part of these large banks to establish branches, and it is a safe assumption that they are seeking deposits. For what purpose will these deposits be used? Will they be used in the interest of the communities where the branch banks or "branch offices" are located, or will these funds be garnered into the parent bank, there to be used by big business or used in speculative ventures?

Mr. Speaker, I want to raise my voice in protest against further indulgence in this practice; I desire to protect the interests of the people with whom I have been so long associated and who have so greatly honored me by sending me here to represent them in the Halls of Congress.

I feel that it is my duty and a privilege as well to carefully scrutinize all legislation that is proposed which affects their interests, and, furthermore, I feel it to be my duty to propose and to seek to have written into the laws of our country measures which will safeguard their rights and privileges.

With this end in view I have prepared and introduced House bill 12528, a bill which prohibits branch banking, both State and National, by forbidding membership in the Federal reserve system to any member bank which establishes or maintains a branch bank or "branch office," exempting only those which were in operation prior to July 1, 1922. The penalty for violation would be expulsion from the Federal reserve system.

An amendment to the national bank act would successfully prohibit the practice by national banks, but in States where branch banking is permitted the national banks would continue to surrender their charters and convert into State banks.

This would check the practice only in those States where branch banking is prohibited and would leave it to flourish even more prolific in States where it is now or may later be permitted.

It is of course well understood that the Federal Government has no direct control over branch banking when practiced by State banks in those States where it is permitted by State law, and believing as I do that branch banking is a menace to our present excellent independent banking system the bill introduced by me (H. R. 12528) prohibits the practice altogether by denying membership in the Federal reserve system to any offending bank.

Mr. Speaker, during the great World War the country banks of the Nation set a standard of patriotism, loyalty, and self-sacrifice that might well be emulated by the large financial institutions which are now striving to suck their lifeblood from them.

Although strained to the uttermost to care for the increased demand for funds for financing local interests, country banks in Missouri never turned a deaf ear to the appeals of the Government and actually embarrassed themselves by borrowing money from their correspondents at exorbitant rates of interest with which to purchase Liberty bonds and urged their customers to make every sacrifice in order that they too might help their country in time of need by purchasing these war bonds.

This has resulted disastrously to country banks, for their safety deposit boxes are now filled with these frozen assets, representing the capital with which they financed their customers in past years.

Many country banks and their customers, farmers and business men, are to-day struggling in adversity as a result of their loyalty and self-sacrifice during the war, and if branch banking is permitted to continue it will be the final blow.

I insert herewith a copy of H. R. 12528, which I commend to the thoughtful consideration of the membership of this Congress:

A bill (H. R. 12528) to amend the Federal reserve act by prohibiting the establishment and maintenance of branch banks or branch offices by member banks.

Be it enacted, etc., That a new section of the Federal reserve act be added to be known as section 2a, to read as follows:

"No member bank shall own, establish, maintain, or operate any branch bank, branch office, or branch place of business in conducting any of its business.

"Any member bank violating the provisions of this section shall thereby forfeit its membership in the Federal reserve bank in which it holds membership: Provided, That any member bank which maintained branch banks or branch offices prior to July 1, 1922, shall be exempt from the provisions of this section as to those branch banks or branch offices which were established prior to July 1, 1922."

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss the pressing need for a comprehensive rural credits system, and shall undertake to show that with the adoption of such a system by the Congress of the United States the chief obstacle in the way of recovery of agriculture will be removed.

When the Federal reserve system was established, it was heralded abroad throughout the land that a panacea had been found for all of our financial ills; that business had been divorced from Wall Street and that in the future there would be an abundance of credit for all legitimate needs.

The country banker who was alert to the needs of his customers at that time pointed out the fact that no definite provision had been made in the establishment of the Federal reserve system to care for the interests of the farmer and stock raiser; but he was silenced by the assurance that credit would be so abundant and elastic that the farmer, stock raiser, and grain shipper would always have sufficient credit to meet their needs.

Deferring to the wisdom and experience of those whom he thought ought to be in a position to better judge the merits of the pending legislation, the country banker was lulled into a position of fancied security, only to awaken to learn that as usual the interests of the large financial and manufacturing institutions had been securely safeguarded; that credit had been guaranteed to business interests; but no definite provision had been made for the farmer.

Right on the heels of this Federal reserve legislation came the great World War with its era of inflation, when prices on all commodities soared, and it was not until the process of deflation began that it became evident that proper provision for credit for the farmer had not been made in the Federal reserve act.

The farmer was the first to feel the effects of deflation, and not only was he compelled to sell his product at a price far below the cost of production, but absolutely no provision had been made for financing him in making or marketing his crops.

Conditions became so acute in the agricultural sections that even wealthy farmers were unable to obtain a nominal credit, and the less fortunate ones were at once plunged into deep financial distress.

Country bankers did their best to meet the situation, but owing to their depleted line of deposits, caused by the withdrawal of funds to pay for Liberty bonds, they were helpless to furnish the necessary relief.

Prior to the war there was usually enough money on deposit in country banks throughout the country to take care of the normal demand of farmers both for funds for making and marketing their crops and also to take care of a goodly portion of the real estate loans in their respective communities, but when the appeal went forth for funds with which to win the war the local capital which was ordinarily used to finance the farmer was ungrudgingly handed over to the Government with which to prosecute the war.

This resulted in the safety deposit boxes of the country banks being gorged with Liberty bonds, which, under existing circumstances, were real frozen assets, and as Liberty bonds had depreciated about 15 per cent there was a natural hesitancy in selling them.

In fact, it was quickly realized by the holders of the Liberty bonds that it was financially suicidal to sell them at the prevailing discount, and the idea also became prevalent that, in view of the fact that evidently they would eventually reach par, the better policy of the local capitalist was to purchase even more of the bonds at the discount, thus affording him an extremely high rate of interest on a nontaxable investment when they reached par, which they very soon did.

The Government, to meet this emergency temporarily, created a revolving fund for agricultural relief to be administered by the War Finance Corporation, which has had a very salutary effect upon the situation, but which is recognized as a temporary measure.

A revolving fund of $25,000,000 was also created to be used by the Federal land bank to finance the sale of its bonds, which also has produced most gratifying results; but no provision was made for a permanent system of rural credits.

The farmer wants only a square deal; he does not seek any advantage over other interests; but he feels that this great Government of his should accord to him the same privileges and advantages it has accorded other interests of less importance than agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I am raising my voice in behalf of the farmer for action, not promises. There have been enough investigations and commissions; what I am appealing for is the enactment of legislation that will furnish a real, dependable rural credit system, one which will function 365 days in the year.

When my constituents honored me by choosing me as their Representative in Congress, I felt they had commissioned me to do constructive work in their behalf, and knowing from actual experience the distressing conditions under which agriculture was trying to exist I immediately began work on the preparation of a rural credits system, based on my experience as a country banker, farmer, and grain shipper.

Believing that the Liberty bonds which were held as frozen assets should be used as a basis for credit for agricultural purposes and that it would be advisable to keep them in the communities where they were held to avoid unstabilizing the financial market by their forced sale, I prepared and introduced House bill 6503, a bill which utilizes the deposit of Liberty bonds in the Federal reserve banks as a basis of agricultural credits, giving the necessary elasticity and yet automatically controlling inflation.

While I sincerely believe the bill referred to, if enacted into law, will furnish the desired relief for agriculture, I hold no special pride in it, but insist that some dependable rural-credits system be promptly adopted, and my efforts in that direction will be continuously put forth.

Mr. Speaker, the farmer is compelled to toil long hours in the broiling summer sun; he must face the stormy blasts of winter to care for his stock; he must then trust to a favorable season to make a crop. His good wife and his household must labor the same long hours and must bend every energy in cooperating with him in his efforts to forge ahead.

Surely he is entitled to the utmost consideration in matters of legislation, for it is to his efforts that we owe our very existence.

Nothing should be overlooked that is conducive to stabilizing and vitalizing the business of agriculture.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11590. An act to amend sections 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 2866. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to parties named herein certain lands in Louisiana; and

H. R. 10361. An act authorizing the sale and patent of certain alleged public lands in Louisiana.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3968. An act to improve the navigability of waters of the United States by preventing oil pollution thereof.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments, had asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. McLEAN, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. GERRY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under Clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 3968. An act to improve the navigability of waters of the United States by preventing oil pollution thereof; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

POISONING BOLL WEEVIL BY AIRPLANE.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the subject of poisoning cotton boll weevil by airplane.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the subject of the boll weevil. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. This is Unanimous-Consent Calendar day. I do not think——

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will not ask for extension of the five minutes.

Mr. WILSON. I have a short report that I wish to have read.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will not object.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, the press reports carried news a few days ago of the successful poisoning of the cotton boll weevil by airplane. I wired to the Delta Laboratory, at Tallulah, La., to secure an official report on the subject, which I have received and which is in a letter that I will ask to have read at the desk in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY,
Tallulah, La., August 28, 1922.

Hon. RILEY J. WILSON,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your telegram of August 26 relative to the use of airplanes for cotton dusting. You will probably recall that in the hearings before the Agricultural Committee last winter the question of the use of airplanes for cotton dusting was discussed at considerable length, and we stated at that time that tests on the subject would be arranged for this season. Some two weeks ago I finally managed to get the Air Service to detail a couple of planes to our work, at our expense, and started out to determine just how the material could be handled in the air. I am frank to say that I really expected little or nothing in the line of successful results, and was very much surprised to find that the dust can be driven down through the plants in beautiful shape from an airplane. Of course, our hoppers and dust-feeding equipment are still exceedingly crude, and it would be a long task to work out a refinement in these to secure the most efficient distribution of dust possible, but even with our present equipment I am inclined to believe that there is a great future for airplanes in insect control, not only in cotton boll weevil and leaf worm work, but in poisoning any other field crop. For example, the large areas of alfalfa in the West which are poisoned every year for the control of the alfalfa weevil would be ideally adapted for airplane dusting.

One surprising feature to me is the fact that the use of the airplanes is much more economical with the poison than the use of even our best dusting machinery. The air blast of the propeller is so terrific that it seems to break the dust up into much finer particles than we have ever been able to secure with the use of ordinary fan equipment. I am very much inclined to believe that with the planes we can cut our dust poundage requirement per acre practically in half, and owing to the cost of the calcium arsenate this would, of course, be a tremendous item.

I am exceedingly interested in the possibility of developing the use of airplanes because of the situation which now exists in cotton dusting. Results of poisoning this year have been exceptionally good, and many districts are so thoroughly sold on the use of calcium arsenate that they have now reached the point where they are ready for community poisoning, rather than individual effort, and community poisoning is, of course, by far the most profitable since it practically eliminates the necessity for the late summer application due to weevil immigration from unpoisoned cotton.

The one difficulty we have seen so far in this operation has been the one of practicable and mechanical equipment for covering such large areas. The use of the plane, if practicable, would solve this since apparently one plane can easily take care of several thousand acres of cotton. Even with our present equipment a hopper carrying only approximately 100 pounds and making frequent landings and refillings necessary, we are poisoning practically 250 acres an hour, and, judging from the results we have been securing, we can easily operate the planes six hours a day.

To test the thoroughness of distribution of our material we are taking advantage of the present invasion of the cotton-leaf worm. The second generation of this worm is just now defoliating the cotton of this community and is so abnormally heavy that apparently all unpoisoned cotton will be stripped within the next week. We are treating these two plantations entirely with the planes and determining our results on the basis of the worms killed, which is, of course, a very easy index to observe. This also gives us a chance to test applications made at different times of the day, deliveries from different elevations, etc., and I think will give us a very valuable lot of information. I am hoping that we can go ahead with our present experiments, and if they continue as favorable as present indications, I am strongly in favor of developing decent dusting equipment for use in the planes during the winter months and undertaking some rather extensive poisoning operations with them next year.

The only difficulty I now foresee is that of securing the cooperation necessary from the Air Service, as I imagine they do not realize the commercial possibilities from the use of planes, and we can only succeed in our work by having them thoroughly interested and willing to furnish us the men and equipment needed. I might suggest that it would be of great value to us if you would kindly take the trouble to call on General Patrick, of the Air Service, and discuss this subject with him from the viewpoint of enlisting his assistance in the project. This is, of course, absolutely pioneering work, but I think has an enormous future.

For your further information I am inclosing herewith a few snapshots which I took from one plane while the other one was dusting.

If this letter does not cover the questions you have in mind, I will be very glad to hear from you further.

Very truly yours,
B. R. COAD,
In charge Delta Laboratory.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD on this subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILSON. I simply wish to add in this connection that Mr. Coad, who makes this very interesting and encouraging report, has been for several years in charge of the Delta Laboratory at Tallulah and has been the principal factor in developing methods and means for the control of the cotton-boll weevil. He is practical and conservative, and therefore his opinion as to this new method for the application of calcium arsenate is of intense public interest.

Since receiving this report I have conferred with the Air Service and the Bureau of Entomology of the Department of Agriculture, and we are assured of their complete cooperation and assistance in demonstrating the practical value of airplanes as a means of fighting the boll weevil and other insects destructive of field crops in all sections of the country.

TARIFF ON WOOL.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on a matter connected with the tariff.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I wish to ask 10 minutes for my colleague [Mr. HAMMER], on this side, to proceed, out of order, for a like time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is not a political speech.

Mr. POU. There will be no politics in the speech he will make.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I understand the gentleman from Ohio, there is no political significance to the remarks he is going to make?

Mr. LONGWORTH. None whatever. I desire to discuss an advertisement which recently appeared in the papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? As the Chair understands, the gentleman from North Carolina consented on the condition that there would be granted 10 minutes on the other side?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will not put any conditions to it. I will ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Ohio that my colleague [Mr. HAMMER] may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the two requests? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I hold in my hand a full-page advertisement which appeared yesterday in one of the Washington newspapers, and which I now ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks without reading.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The following is the advertisement referred to:

SENATOR SIMMONS SAYS, "TARIFF WILL COST CONSUMERS THREE BILLION A YEAR."

It will be gratifying to know that the customers of the Freeny Co. will not pay one cent of this three billion.

Increasing the cost of woolens means higher clothes prices. Fortunately we bought heavily this season and have a good stock on hand; also have thousands of yards contracted for future delivery bought before the rise.

We could make more by holding these woolens for the rise, but we are tailors, not speculators.

PRICE OF CLOTHING BOOSTED—MILLIONS INCREASE ON CLOTHING.

Thus Senator SIMMONS takes wool clothing. The average ad valorem rate in the Underwood-Simmons tariff for revenue only law was 31.6 per cent. The average rate in the present Senate bill is 75 per cent.

Based on annual consumption or use of clothing, the tariff protection to domestic manufactures under the existing tariff law was $265,000,000; under the Senate bill it jumps to $629,000,000. The estimated total cost to consumer under the Underwood bill was $477,000,000; under the Senate bill it will be $1,132,000,000—an increased cost of $655,000,000.

Using a similar process of figuring, the sugar bill of the American consumer may be increased by $587,000,000. Sewing machines, free under the Underwood-Simmons tariff act, may cost $23,000,000 more in the aggregate under the Senate bill drafted.

It possibly will cost $126,000,000 additional per year to buy cutlery; $32,000,000 for buttons, such as go on father's trousers or the baby's dress; $583,000,000 will be added on cotton manufactures, and $665,000,000 on wool manufactures.

A thousand new satisfied customers are worth more to us than future profits in stock. To induce 1,000 men to try our service we are making it an object to buy now before we are forced to raise our prices.

Here is your opportunity!

Suits and overcoats to your individual measure, priced as low as $32.50. Many we can not duplicate now for double the price.

All high-class woolens in genteel and distinctive patterns, attractive in appearance and serviceable in quality, made of fine selected long-fiber wool, in every coloring from blue to the new heathers and herringbone effects to smart stripings and English checks and plaids from Scotland.

Tweeds, Shetlands, and homespuns; cheviots and smooth-faced worsteds.

We hand press and clean all clothes made by us free of charge. Our liveried chauffeurs will call for and deliver same on notification from our customers. This privilege is extended also to those who buy at this pretariff sale.

THE W. M. FREENY CO. (INC.),
Tailors and Direct Importers of Exclusive Woolens,
611 Fourteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.

(Member of Association of Army and Navy Stores (Inc.). We are the exclusive Washington representatives.)

Gentlemen of the House, this advertisement is printed at the expense of what is known as the W. M. Freeny Co. (Inc.), who style themselves tailors and direct importers of exclusive woolens, at 611 Fourteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C. This advertisement urges the public to buy now at present prices because as soon as the new tariff goes into effect the prices will necessarily be very greatly raised. There appears this statement:

The average ad valorem rate in the Underwood-Simmons tariff for revenue only law was 31.6 per cent. The average rate in the present Senate bill is 75 per cent.

Based on annual consumption or use of clothing, the tariff protection to domestic manufactures under the existing tariff law was $265,000,000; under the Senate bill it jumps to $629,000,000. The estimated total cost to the consumer under the Underwood bill was $477,000,000; under the Senate bill it will be $1,132,000,000—an increased cost of $655,000,000.

Now, gentlemen, that statement is an absolute, and I assume, a willful perversion of the facts, as I am about to point out. Further on they say:

A thousand new satisfied customers are worth more to us than future profits in stock. To induce 1,000 men to try our service, we are making it an object to buy now before we are forced to raise our prices.

And again:

Increasing the cost of woolens means higher clothes prices. Fortunately we have bought heavily this season and have a good stock on hand.

Mark that, gentlemen.

Fortunately we bought heavily this season, and have a good stock on hand; also have thousands of yards contracted for future delivery bought before the rise.

We could make more by holding these woolens for the rise, but we are tailors, not speculators.

Now, gentlemen, I repeat that this is a willful perversion of the facts, made undoubtedly with the sinister desire to obtain money under false pretenses from their customers.

They have stated that under the present law the duties are lower than under the future tariff law. Now, if the present law with regard to woolens was the Underwood tariff law that general statement would be true, because no doubt in whatever bill may be finally agreed to by the conferees and eventually by the Congress, the rates on wool will be higher than in the Underwood tariff law. But the existing tariff law which applies to wool and woolens is not the Underwood law. It is the emergency tariff law. The highest rates provided in the Senate bill are very much lower than in the existing law. I read from the existing law the rates of duty imposed on wool, commonly known as clothing wool. They are: Unwashed, 15 cents per pound; washed, 30 cents per pound; scoured, 45 cents per pound.

The highest rate on scoured wool in the Senate bill is 33 cents a pound. In other words, the duties in the existing law are 12 cents a pound higher than the highest rates in the Senate bill. Therefore, if the tariff would have any effect on the price of woolens, as this man says it will, its effect will be to greatly decrease the price of clothing. [Applause.]

Furthermore, I am reliably informed that the American Woolen Co. has recently issued its list of prices for the coming year on all grades of woolens, and that those prices are in every case at least as low and in many cases much lower than the wholesale existing prices of woolen goods.

Now note that this man Freeny says—

Fortunately we have bought heavily this season and have a good stock on hand.

When was the existing tariff law passed on woolens? It was passed on May 25, 1921, and therefore Freeny bought his stock this season, as he states, when the rates on wool were 12 cents a pound higher than the highest rate in the tariff bill now under consideration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am going to make a point, gentlemen, to note from now on the prices that this man advertises, and if he shall later on charge higher prices than he is charging now, when lower tariffs on wools and woolens come into effect, he is just a plain, conscienceless profiteer, and nothing else. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I felt it my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the House, because this is a sample of the kind of advertising that is and will be prevalent throughout the country by men who are seeking to prey upon the public by imposing upon their credulity.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to my colleague from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is aware, but evidently has overlooked it for a moment, that there is over 100,000,000 pounds of wool in bond in Boston now waiting to come in when the lower rates are put into effect. They would not be held in bond in that way if there was going to be a rise.

Mr. MAGEE. Would the gentleman state the House rate?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The House rate in the pending tariff bill is 25 cents a pound on the scoured content and 26 cents on scoured wool. In the Senate bill the rate is 33 cents a pound on the scoured content and 33 cents on scoured wool, whereas the existing rate is 45 cents a pound, or 12 cents a pound higher. [Applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On August 29, 1922:

H. J. Res. 170. Joint resolution to approve the holding of a national and international exhibition in the city of Philadelphia in 1926 upon the Fairmount Park and parkway site selected by the Sesquicentennial Exhibition Association, and lands contiguous thereto that may be acquired for that purpose, as an appropriate celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

On August 30, 1922:

H. R. 5775. An act for the relief of Liberty loan subscribers of the North Penn Bank, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Santa Rosa National Bank, Santa Rosa, Calif.; Mineral City Bank, Mineral City, Ohio; Robbinsdale State Bank, Robbinsdale, Minn., and Farmers & Merchants' State Bank, Kenmare, N. Dak.

On August 31, 1922:

H. R. 11396. An act to regulate foreign commerce in the importation into the United States of the adult honeybee (Apis mellifica).

On September 1, 1922:

H. R. 4. An act granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors; and to certain Army nurses; and to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1917.

MUSCLE SHOALS—PRODUCTION OF NITRATES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HAMMER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, in the outset permit me to say that the tariff rates on wool, to which the gentleman from Ohio has referred, are to be found in the Republican emergency tariff law and not in the Underwood law.

So many eloquent speeches have been made by the Members of this House on the need of nitrates, not only as a means of preparedness for the emergencies of war in the manufacture of explosive and poison gases but in time of peace and war as an aid to agriculture in the manufacture of fertilizers, that I shall not take the time to indulge in generalities regarding this subject. It may be safely assumed that there is not a Member of this House who does not know that of all the countries on earth the United States, through failure of our Government authorities to make the necessary provision, is the only one which has chosen to depend on a distant foreign source for a supply of nitrogen, the most expensive element necessary to maintain our military defense as well as our soils.

OUR NITROGEN HISTORY SHAMEFUL.

It was in 1898, the year of our war with Spain, that Sir William Crooks, then president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, called the attention of the scientific world to the fact that we were rapidly nearing the end of our available supply of nitrogen, and nitrogen is one of the most essential elements necessary to maintain life in any form on this planet. We are all familiar, or should be, with the history of what followed the nitrogen experiment that we tried a few years ago. We know how the nitrogen industry was driven out of the United States by the veto of President Taft when an attempt was made to locate such a plant on the Coosa River in Alabama, and the air fixation nitrogen industry from that day to this has been a beggar at the congressional doorway seeking a supply of cheap hydroelectric power that is necessary for the maintenance of the industry.

Whether at home or in foreign lands nothing is so inspiring to a patriotic American as to behold the flag of freedom, and I am glad that this is so. I am glad that we have an America we can all be proud of, and a flag that we worship with a spirit of devotion, but I bow my head in shame when I read the nitrogen record of this great country of ours. However well we may be acquainted with the facts, it will do us no harm, for the sake of the future, to briefly review for a moment the nitrogen lesson of the war. The ineffectiveness of our war-time nitrogen problem can not be laid at the door of Congress, for long before war had been declared Congress passed an appropriation of $20,000,000, approved June 3, 1916, authorizing and empowering the President of the United States—to make or cause to be made such investigation as in his judgment is necessary to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of nitrates and other products for munitions of war, and useful in the manufacture of fertilizer, and other useful products.

The Secretary of War was designated to carry out the provisions of this act, and at his request the President of the National Academy of Sciences, in cooperation with the American Chemical Society, appointed a committee of well-known scientists and engineers to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of the desired nitrogen compounds. This committee did its full duty and submitted its final report on January 20, 1917, and the report recommended:

COMMITTEE'S THREE RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. That there be imported a sufficient supply of Chilean nitrate, to be stored within the United States to meet the needs of the first year of hostilities.

2. That the Government should prepare to utilize the large domestic production of by-product coke-oven ammonia by erecting a plant for purifying this ammonia and converting it into nitric acid.

3. That the Government should provide for the development of processes for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen on as large scale as possible by developing at a suitable location such hydroelectric power as possible with the available appropriation, and that the Government shall sell this power at cost to private companies for its use in fixing atmospheric nitrogen.

But there was delay due to the fact that on March 9, 1917, the Secretary of War appointed a new committee, called the nitrate supply committee, and in spite of the fact that the country had then declared war upon Germany this committee made the recommendation that this country should ignore the only process of fixing nitrogen that was in commercial operation on this side of the Atlantic and engaged in an extended program of research and investigation to cost about $4,000,000, and meanwhile recommended that—the decision as to more extensive installation of nitrogen-fixation processes and water-power development in connection with them be postponed until the (experimental) plants above recommended are in operation or until further need arises.

The further "need" was not long in arising. In spite of the fact that during the year 1917 we imported from Chile two hundred and fifty-three 5,000-ton shiploads of nitrate of soda the Ordnance Department in October of that year was confronted with a very large deficiency in the supply of explosives and materials for explosives, and finally, 17 months after Congress had provided the way and the means for the solution of the war-time nitrogen emergency, the Ordnance Department turned to the only people on this continent with commercial experience in the business which they were trying to develop, namely, the American Cyanamid Co., and nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, with its annual capacity of 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate, containing 40,000 tons of pure nitrogen—equivalent of 250,000 tons of Chilean nitrate, which is the amount of nitrate used in a normal year by American agriculture. This great plant was the result, but 17 months of priceless time had been lost due to misguided or incorrect views as now in the light of time fully appears, and when the plant was ready to offer the relief and make available the great tonnage of explosive material that was necessary the sacrifices had been made and the war had been won.

Then followed the breaking up of a great war machine, a period of salvage, and the return to a peace-time basis. The administration, appreciating the fact that Congress had said, in making the original appropriation for the nitrate plants, that these plants should produce "nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizer and other useful products," sent experts to Europe to work out a plan for the utilization of the nitrate plants.

THE SPECIAL INTERESTS INTERVENED.

Meanwhile certain special interests which for years had been doling out to the farmer his nitrogen supply in this country looked with no small concern at the prospect of the building up a great nitrogen industry in America, but they knew that the plant was an explosives plant, that for its conversion to manufacture of fertilizer products would require the investment of many millions of dollars. These interests then decided that the United States nitrate plants should not be operated by anyone in the production of fertilizer.

A ready answer, therefore, awaited the Federal nitrate director, Dr. Arthur Graham Glasgow, when he approached the presidents of the great fertilizer companies. He offered them the use of these nitrate plants free of any rental or other charge whatever until they should earn 9 per cent on such capital as they might invest, and thereafter, he proposed, that they divide any additional profits with the Government, but with one accord they turned him down coldly.

An effort was also made to get certain financiers in New York to undertake to form a company to operate these plants. Scant consideration was given to the scheme and no investigations undertaken; an appeal was likewise made to the coke oven interests with the same result.

FORD'S THUNDERBOLT.

So, as a last resort a Government corporation was proposed by the administration, under what was known as the Wadsworth-Kahn bill. These interests, having declined the opportunity to operate the plants themselves, proceeded to bombard the Members of Congress with propaganda adverse to the proposal that the Government should operate the plant, and while the bill was passed by the Senate, it died in the House Committee on Military Affairs and the fertilizer companies and other big interests rejoiced and were made glad. It looked as though these interests had won.

The scrapping process at Muscle Shoals had already begun, and shipments of materials were going out from the nitrate plants when the farmers, who had fought for the preservation and operation of these plants from the beginning, called on Secretary of War Weeks and asked him if he would undertake to secure proposals for the purchase or lease of the Government's property at Muscle Shoals. He agreed to do so, and once more these various interests, including the hydroelectric power companies of the Southeastern States, were given an opportunity to bid on the property. Once more the answer was unanimously "No." Not an offer was made, and the House had rejected the amendment appropriating $10,000,000 for continuing the work at Muscle Shoals. The project was a dead issue until out of the blue there dropped the thunderbolt of Henry Ford. [Applause.]

Here was a rank outsider who did not belong to the fraternity, who had the audacity to oppose the well-laid plans of these thoroughly intrenched interests. The nerve of Ford was astounding. Something had to be done, some offer had to be put in to meet the proposal of Henry Ford; and, after hasty conferences behind closed doors, it was decided that the Alabama Power Co. was the logical party to present a bid which, it was confidently expected, would be more than a match for the Ford proposal. Meanwhile, encouraged by the unfriendly reception which the Ford proposal was receiving at the hands of the Secretary of War, other bidders of unknown responsibility began to appear until five or six proposals had been made for the property which previously had been considered on its way to the national junk heap with the entire consent and approval of the opposing interests.

DUBIOUS HOUSE COMMITTEE REPORT.

For seven months the Ford proposal was in the office of the Secretary of War, and finally the Secretary sent it to Congress, not with a recommendation, but with a letter of comment, in which his unfriendly attitude toward the offer was apparent, and after months of voluminous hearings in which the intents and purposes and motives of Mr. Ford were bitterly assailed the majority of the committee finally reported a recommendation for the acceptance of his offer. Doubtless to the astonishment of the other bidders their proposals, including that of the Alabama Power Co., did not even receive serious consideration.

Just why the majority of the Military Committee should elect to play into the hands of the Alabama Power Co. by reserving the right to sell to that company the Government's interest in the steam plant at Gorgas, Ala., and undertaking to "accept" the Ford proposal on this basis it is hard to understand.

During the war, when it was necessary to provide a supply of electric power for nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals from a source immediately available, the Government had asked the Alabama Power Co. to cooperate in an effort to secure this power quickly. After much negotiation, which was brought to a hasty conclusion on the day of the false report of the signing of the armistice, the company entered into a most remarkable arrangement with the Government whereby the Government placed an additional unit in its power plant and paid the Alabama Power Co. a profit of $280,000 for installing this Government property on the Alabama Power Co.'s own land.

ALABAMA POWER CO. OVERPLAYS ITS HAND.

This contract, which has been denounced in vigorous terms by the Attorney General and the Acting Judge Advocate General, sought to turn every possible change of circumstances to the advantage of the Alabama Power Co. Under its terms, by the simple expedient of supplying power to the Government at a price almost twice as high as the price of four mills per kilowatt hour asked by the Union Gas & Electric Co. in its contract to supply power for nitrate plant No. 3 at Cincinnati, Ohio, and applying part of the power charges on the purchase of the unit, the Alabama Power Co. would ultimately have become the owner of the Government property with no cost to it whatever. But the Alabama Power Co. overplayed its hand by refusing to bid on the Government property until after the Ford bid had come in, and then, seeing the futility of attempting to secure this power plant under a contract which the highest legal authorities in the administrative branch of the Government had declared null and void, the company finally came out with an offer of $2,500,000—which I believe was subsequently raised to $3,000,000—for the purchase of the Gorgas plant, which had been built by the Alabama Power Co., as heretofore stated, under a long and difficult to understand contract with the United States at a cost of about $5,000,000 to the American taxpayers, $280,000 of which was clear profit to the Alabama Power Co. The Alabama Power Co.'s position for years has been one of anticipation that the Muscle Shoals power project in its entirety would fall into its hands, as is clearly seen by all who have taken the time to study and understand its operations.

GORGAS PLANT NECESSARY TO FORD CONTRACT.

Because of the irregularity of the flow of the Tennessee River steam power is necessary to supplement the hydroelectric power during times of low water. At such times the deficiency in power makes itself felt gradually and the large and unwieldy single unit of 80,000 horsepower which constitutes the steam-power plant at nitrate plant No. 2 is not an economical source to use as an auxiliary to a hydroelectric plant. However, combining this with a smaller unit such as that at Gorgas, which is only 40,000 horsepower, the system becomes flexible and much more economical. Mr. Ford, therefore, desires to use Gorgas as an auxiliary to the Muscle Shoals power, and for this reason included it in his offer. The Alabama Power Co. desires the Gorgas plant to use as an auxiliary to the water power which the company has. This plant, together with the Muscle Shoals development, once in the hands of the Alabama Power Co. would complete its monopoly of the power resources of the State of Alabama and make reasonable competition in the industry a commercial impossibility in that State. But, thanks to the Ford offer, the drift of this great enterprise in the direction of the Alabama Power Co. has been definitely stopped and the problem has resolved itself into one simple question: Shall we accept the Ford offer or shall we adopt a plan of Government operation? If we accept Mr. Ford's offer we should remember that undertaking to change his offer constitutes a rejection of it, and not an acceptance.

FORD PROPOSAL GIVES FARMERS SUPERVISION.

Many objections have been raised to the Ford proposal, for it is doubtful if there has been a single proposition in many years which promises to tread so vigorously on the toes of so many hitherto favored industrial interests. It actually proposes to give the farmers supervision and regulatory power by a board of nine over the price and distribution of one of their greatest needs, agricultural fertilizer.

This is terrible, say the special interests, and look with such disfavor upon it that they regard it in the light of a heresy. This board of nine, seven of whom are farmers nominated not by the President but by the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the Farmers' Union, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Two members represent the company, with an advisory member from the Department of Agriculture. This board is to determine cost and regulate price, to limit the profit to 8 per cent, and shall have access to books at any reasonable time. This board has the power to regulate the sale and distribution of fertilizer products. The Federal Trade Commission is given final power to settle any disagreement arising in the board. This guarantees to the farmers a square deal and an honest intent to make cheaper fertilizer for the farmer, who through his own agency is to determine what this fair, actual annual cost has been. [Applause.]

FORD WOULD GIVE CHEAP POWER.

The Ford proposal provides for the amortization and retiring of the capital invested in the water power, returning the plant, when he has paid for it in full by the amortization plan, to the Government under a plan which gives extremely cheap power to future generations without unduly increasing the cost of power to the present generation.

The Ford proposal would reduce the capital investment in hydroelectrical development, and since the interest on the investment is the principal item of the cost of hydroelectric power, less investment means cheaper power; but from the standpoint of Wall Street this is nothing short of outrageous, for if the Government encourages the development of cheap water power in this country by requiring the amortization of the capital, how will future syndicates make a million dollars in an afternoon by refinancing a hydroelectric operation?

WOULD MAINTAIN PLANT 100 YEARS.

And Mr. Ford actually proposes to maintain the nitrate plant for 100 years, and agrees to pay $35,000 a year to maintain Dam No. 2 and $20,000 a year to maintain Dam No. 3. What an idea! Of course, it will cost $2,235,000 a year just for the depreciation on this property; the replacements alone are $400,000 a year and it takes another $100,000 to guard it; but is not that the Government's business?

Is not that the Government's business, say the fertilizer manufacturers and the interests opposing this effort to lease to Mr. Ford in the interest of more than 6,000,000 farmers and the public generally throughout the entire country and not confined to any one section? What business has this rank outsider, who is not one of the money changers, to come up and make this offer and undertake to lighten the load of the taxpayer and take this burden off the Government and thereby expose the business methods and enormous profits of the big interests?

CONGRESS TOO INCOMPETENT TO ACT.

Is it not the duty of the Government to bear the burdens of the rich, as has been demonstrated in the action of this Congress in its tariff and revenue bills and in attempting to pass the ship subsidy bill and other legislation? And now, in the closing days of this session, instead of attending to the public business the majority leaders have decreed a program of adjournment from day to day and refuse to permit consideration of Muscle Shoals or other legislation in the interest of the farmer and the public generally. Is it not true these leaders are so scared about the doom which awaits them at the coming election they refuse to permit the House to function until it is becoming less and less useful as a branch of the Government, so much so that even Secretary of War Weeks says this Congress has reached the "lowest ebb of any Congress in the entire history of the Nation"?

Even the staid old Boston Transcript declares this is—the worst House in many years, breaking more pledges than any Congress in 20 years, its leaders being leaders in name only, and for the most part they represent either the worst or the most stupid in either party to-day, and by its record is unworthy of another lease of power.

Conditions are such that other great Republican newspapers condemn the House in equally strong terms.

FORD TO WORK OUT FARM PROBLEMS.

Mr. Ford also has a provision in his offer about research that is causing no end of anxiety to those who have feasted and fattened so long upon the public. What do the fertilizer companies want with research? They have been doing business for 50 years with little or none of it, and they have finally educated the farmer to buy their "Wonder Worker Corn Grower" with his eyes shut. They have sold him dirt and sand, inert matter, for years, all nicely sacked and neatly labeled, and if the compound contained only 12 pounds of plant food and 88 pounds of inert matter in a 100-pound sack that was no fault of theirs. The very nature of the kind of business they were doing required that it be done that way, as though the farmer did not have enough sense to mix the 12 pounds of plant food with 88 pounds of dirt and sand from his own farm, thereby greatly saving freight rates. And then by this method the railroads received more freight, and, again, a 100-pound sack looks like it is worth more than a 12-pound sack. [Applause.]

It was merely the result of using the raw materials that are available. To be sure, there had been disconcerting moments when inventors had brought out new processes, but, happily for the fertilizer interests, the patents could be purchased and locked up in a safe, without disturbing their normal business operations. But here comes this fellow Ford with a pile of cash as big as the Pyramids of Gizeh and sends along his chief engineer to testify that he is ready to spend more than $50,000,000 to work out the farmers' problems. Of course, it is preposterous, say these interests.

FORD DOES NOT NEED THIS TO MAKE MONEY.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us drop this point of view of the interests and take up for a moment the viewpoint of the great body of people who have sent us here to Washington to represent them. No reasonable-minded man can claim for a moment that Henry Ford needs Muscle Shoals to make money; he has a well-demonstrated working plant for that purpose at Detroit, Mich., which is one of the wonders of the world in modern industries, and it is turning out tractors and automobiles at the astounding rate of 5,200 per day. But, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to Mr. Ford, it can hardly be said that it is desirable to go down in history merely as a maker of "flivvers," however successful in that art he may be, and it is easy to appreciate that in making this unmatched offer for Muscle Shoals Mr. Ford is seeking to build an agricultural monument to himself that shall endure when the last of his host of "flivvers" has gone the way of all machinery.

FORD'S GUARANTY.

What, then, does the Ford offer mean to the farmer and to the consumer? Is it some benefit dependent upon the life of Mr. Ford and which will be turned into a greedy monopoly at his death, as some have suggested? By no means. The best answer to criticism is found in the Ford offer itself, for it is binding upon Mr. Ford, "his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and upon his company, its successors and assigns," to manufacture "nitrogen and other commercial fertilizer, mixed or unmixed, with or without filler, according to demand." Mr. Ford's death would in no way delay or prevent the carrying out of the contract, for not only would the $10,000,000 paid-in capital stock of the Ford operating company be a guaranty of his good faith, but his vast estate after his death, binding his heirs and assigns, is a further guaranty according to express wording of the contract.

The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. This is equivalent to 250,000 tons of Chilean nitrate, which is the entire amount of Chilean nitrate used annually by American farmers in a normal year such as 1913. Here is a benefit that is not conditional upon the life of Mr. Ford and it is not conditional for the making of fertilizer at a profit of 8 per cent or any other per cent, for while it is subject to the ordinary contingencies clause used in commercial contracts, this clause, in the opinion of the Judge Advocate General, would not excuse Mr. Ford from operating even though he made no profit at all. He would even be compelled to operate at a loss unless relieved by Congress or a court of equity. There can be no doubt about this. The Ford offer requires the making of fertilizers under a solemn, binding contract, continuously, whether at profit or a loss, throughout the entire period of the lease, as well as to carry on investigations by scientific research by the most skilled chemists in an effort to discover new and improved processes of making fertilizer products.

Emphatically there is the best authority in the testimony, which all of us should read, to show that under the conditions at Muscle Shoals cheaper fertilizer can be produced, and the price is likely to be about one-half of what it is at present. It is not claimed that the acceptance of the Ford offer is a relief from all industrial and economic ills, but it is contended that it is an important step in the right direction and will lead to many such developments for the producton of cheaper plant food and increased production for the farms of the entire country.

WILL MAKE CHEAP ALUMINUM.

Beyond all reasonable doubt the fertilizer program under the Ford offer will require the greater part of this useful power, and if he spends his own money and builds dams, as he will be compelled to do to economically produce fertilizer products, to regulate the flow of the Tennessee River, thereby increasing the supply of power for other purposes, he will have no unfair advantage over such producers of necessities as the Aluminum Co. of America, which is the greatest power user in the world and which enjoys perpetual rights on several of the great power streams. One of these aluminum plants is on a great river partly running through and forming the boundary line of six counties of the great agricultural and manufacturing district I have the honor to represent.

Mr. Ford expects to make aluminum at Muscle Shoals, and if he does he will have to compete with one of the most powerful monopolies ever established in this country, for it is well known that Mr. Mellon's aluminum company has no domestic competition whatever. We believe that it is to the interest of the consumer that the price of aluminum be cheapened by fair competition, and that aluminum be made a part of automobiles and tractors and railway cars, and the burdens of transportation thus lightened.

TO REDUCE COST OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER.

There is another feature of the Ford offer that strikes a hard blow at privileged financiers and offers in the future to lighten the daily tasks of hundreds of thousands of people.

As Senator LADD has pointed out in his able report on Muscle Shoals—> * * * there is a feature of hydroelectric power economics well known to those in the business and testified to in the hearings since 1916 that the general public probably does not appreciate. When the items which go to make up the cost of hydroelectric power at the switchboard of the generating station are examined it is found that under the conditions of construction and financing existing in the United States the single item of interest on the investment constitutes 80 per cent or more of the cost of the power.

> Mr. Ford proposes to eliminate the interest by amortizing and returning the investment, through the operation of a long-time sinking fund. He therefore provides a series of payments which, when invested in a sinking fund at as low a rate of interest as 4½ per cent, will return the entire cost of both dams, including the $17,000,000 already expended by the Government. The total sum returned, as stated by the Secretary of War, would amount in this case to $70,100,000. This eliminates the capital charges and interest and ultimately reduces the cost of power to the mere cost of operation, maintenance, replacements, taxes, and administration, which in a large plant is from $2 to $5 per horsepower per year, or less than 1 mill per kilowatt hour. Under this plan the bonded indebtedness on a water-power development is reduced instead of being increased, as is frequently the procedure in refinancing operations.

Think of this and the great benefit to farmers as compared with the cost of the single item of interest on investment in hydroelectric power constituting four-fifths of the cost of the power produced under the present system of extravagant financing of power plants now operated.

WHAT CHEAP ELECTRICITY MEANS.

If throughout the United States hydroelectric powers can be developed under a plan which eliminates the greatest part of their financial burdens so that the cost of a large supply of hydroelectric power can be brought down to a low level, the benefits can not be estimated, for on one hand it means cheaper fertilizer and when distributed there is no other source of power which can take the place of manual and animal labor on the farm as conveniently and cheaply as electric energy. No other agent can supply all the requirements of light, heat, and power from the same source, and cheap electricity in rural communities will do much to make country life attractive and to provide those conveniences and comforts which now are available only to those who live in towns and cities.

Cheap electricity on the farm means power for reaping, thrashing, grinding, cutting fodder, sawing wood, operating cold-storage systems, together with all of the household appliances such as house lighting, washing, sewing machines, carpet sweeping, fans, and cook stoves, while in Germany even plowing is done by electricity, and their experience has been quoted to show that it can be done more cheaply per acre than by either horse or steam tractor.

No doubt one of the purposes of Mr. Ford is to build an industrial city on the banks of the Tennessee River, in which there will be model homes provided with every necessary convenience of modern civilization, with sufficient acreage as a part of each home owned by thrifty, contented workmen to make life comfortable and living easy, with community cooperative ownership of the most expensive implements for the cultivation of the soil.

Referring briefly in passing, permit me to say only three States in the entire Union made a better showing in gross crop values in 1919 than North Carolina—Illinois, Iowa, and Texas, in the order named. In 1920, 10 States stood above, but in 1921 the States ahead were only four—Texas, California, Illinois, and New York. Its rank in per acre production of crop values in 1921 was surpassed by only one farm State, and that was California, with its wonderful fruits and vegetables intensified by its cooperative marketing associations. The seven other States that were ahead in acreage are not, strictly speaking, agricultural States, but only have a very limited acreage devoted to farming; one is an irrigation State in the Rockies and the other six are States in the East chiefly devoted to industrial pursuits, with but a comparatively small acreage devoted to the cultivation of the soil, and that a most intensive method of cultivation.

WHAT HYDROELECTRIC POWER IS DOING FOR NORTH CAROLINA.

What the cheapening of hydroelectric power will do for a State is strikingly shown by the experience of my own State of North Carolina. Virtually the whole State is covered by a network of transmission lines which distribute power from many large hydroelectric plants. The total water-power development has recently been estimated at 360,000 horsepower in North Carolina. The development of this great water power has resulted in the building up of manufactures so that North Carolina in the past decade has advanced from the twenty-third to the tenth State in the value of its industries. In internal revenue receipts for the fiscal year 1920 North Carolina stood eighth, and her returns exceeded those of the wealthy State of New Jersey and the noted agricultural State of Missouri and of the great State of Texas with its vast and varied resources, and they are more than double the returns from such well-developed States as Maryland, Minnesota, Indiana, and Virginia, and yet to-day there is not sufficient power in North Carolina to meet the demand and the hydroelectric industry is certain to be extended within the next 10 years.

POINTING THE WAY TO BETTER CONDITIONS.

The acceptance of the Ford proposal means that there will be operated a hydroelectric development in this country under a plan which applied at other power sites can ultimately bring the cost of power to the point where the poor man can buy it as well as his well-to-do neighbor.

The testimony shows the Muscle Shoals plant itself is not adapted to public utility uses, but it is especially useful for such electro-chemical operations as the manufacture of fertilizer, aluminum, and other electro-chemical products. By utilizing it in this way its value to the country can be felt over a much larger area than if the power itself were distributed to small consumers. While not in itself adapted to public utility use, the Muscle Shoals development under the Ford offer will point the way to the most economical method of operating hydroelectric plants throughout the country for public utilities with great benefit to the consumer.

WAR AND PEACE TIME ADVANTAGES.

In conclusion, there are certain outstanding facts concerning the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals that can not be denied. Mr. Ford maintains under his contract the greatest of our war-time plants ready for immediate use in time of war, and bears all of the depreciation, replacements, repairs, guarding, and routine expenses himself. He carries on an extensive program of research on a commercial scale and he undertakes to adopt the results from such research so that the nitrate plant will be maintained in the most modern condition. These provisions alone will certainly call for the rebuilding by Mr. Ford, at his own expense, of the nitrate plant many times over, whether he has been able to write off the cost of the plant at the time the change is made or not.

One of his principal operations will be the manufacture of commercial fertilizers, for under the clear and express provisions of the contract he must not only produce nitrogen but other commercial fertilizers according to demand, and in all his fertilizer operations he is limited to a profit of not more than 8 per cent on the actual annual cost of production; and he has agreed that a board of farmers, as I have stated, shall inspect his books and pass on the fairness of his prices and the distribution of his product.

These are the great considerations in the Ford offer; beside them, the $5,000,000 which he offers is merely a cash payment to bind the transaction. No other offer has even approached the Ford proposal in the extent of the benefits which may be expected from it, and judging by the record which I have roughly reviewed, there is not the slightest reason to expect that by rejecting this splendid offer a more favorable proposition to the taxpayer and the consumer, who are the real owners of these plants, will be forthcoming. As a majority of the House Military Committee have well said, the operation of this plant by the Federal Government can not be expected to secure such benefits as those promised under the Ford offer.

The plant has been idle for nearly four years and America has lagged far behind in the international race for nitrogen preparedness, both for agriculture and munitions of war. Let us delay no further, but act at once and accept this splendid proposal while we still have the opportunity to do so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Unanimous Consent Calendar is in order to-day. The Clerk will report the first bill on the calendar.

MAILS FOR THE BLIND.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10496) to provide for the free transmission through the mails of certain publications for the blind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think this bill should go off the calendar until the December session. The parties interested in this bill are away from the city, and therefore I think I shall have to object.

Mr. STEENERSON. I ask the gentleman to let this bill go over until Miss ROBERTSON comes back.

Mr. STAFFORD. They will have an opportunity of presenting it at the December session.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR SERVICE MEN.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

House Resolution 422 (Rept. No. 1201).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H. R. 10874, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, be taken from the Speaker's table; that the amendments of the Senate thereto be disagreed to in gross; that the conference asked by the Senate be agreed to; and that the Speaker without intervening motion appoint managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the intent and purpose of this rule is perfectly plain to all the Members of this House and needs no explanation from me at this time. It is for the purpose of sending to conference by the most direct method the adjusted compensation measure. It is practically the same rule that was used when we sent the tariff bill to conference last week.

I simply desire to state at this time that in offering this resolution I am not acting or speaking for myself or according to my own judgment. I am acting as an instrumentality of the majority of the House and a representative of the majority of the Rules Committee. This legislation passed the House by a very large vote of the Members on both sides of the aisle, and the Committee on Rules thought they were acting in accordance with the wishes and desires of the House by bringing in a rule to provide for facilitating the passage of this legislation at as early a date as possible.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I wanted to inquire whether it was not possible to fix a limitation of time in which the conferees could report.

Mr. SNELL. I do not think it is possible, but it is expected to come back in a reasonable length of time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] five minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the time for discussion of the bonus proposition has passed. The time for action is now here. This rule provides the shortest avenue to that action which is necessary to write this legislation upon the statute books.

The resolution comes as a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. I do not see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] here at the moment. Will the conference on the bonus bill be a partisan conference or a full and free conference?

Mr. SNELL. I suppose it will be a full and free conference.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman any information on the subject, or has any other Member any information as to how it is going to be considered?

Mr. SNELL. As far as I know, there is no limitation. The conference is to be under the same conditions as all other conferences.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly it will be a full and free conference, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARNER. Is it to be considered as the tariff bill is now being considered, from a partisan standpoint, or are the Democratic members of the conference committee to be invited to participate in the conference?

Mr. MONDELL. That is a matter for the conferees to decide, but I assume that all the conferees will be invited in. I have no information on the subject, but that is certainly my opinion.

Mr. GARNER. I am asking the question now because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] did not hesitate to say to the House and to the country that he expected to consider the tariff bill at a partisan conference, from a partisan standpoint, and I did not know how he was going to consider this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I think this is not a partisan matter, and my idea is, of course, that all the members of the conference committee will be in the conference.

Mr. SNELL. As far as the Rules Committee are concerned, it is not partisan. It is reported out by the unanimous vote of the committee, as stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], and I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. GARNER, and Mr. COLLIER.

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended which I now send to Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules and pass a bill as amended, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 12493) amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the President, upon the recommendation of the board of general officers convened to carry out the elimination provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1922, is authorized to determine the number of officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel that shall be discharged and recommissioned in the next lower grade notwithstanding the limitation of 800 in said act: Provided, That the President is authorized, upon the recommendation of said board, to increase the authorized strength of various grades as prescribed in said act by not more than 50 colonels, 150 majors, and 300 captains, and to decrease by a total of not to exceed 500, apportioned among the grades as the President may determine, the authorized strength of the two lowest grades as prescribed by said act: Provided further, That on and after January 1, 1923, there shall be not to exceed a total of 12,000 officers in the Army, and on and after that date the authorized number in each grade shall be as prescribed in said act or as modified and prescribed by the President in accordance with the provisions of the preceding proviso, and on that date there shall not be any promotion-list officers in any grade in addition to these prescribed numbers: Provided further, That the discharge and recommission of officers in the next lower grade shall not operate to reduce the pay or allowances which they are now receiving or to deprive them of credit for service now counted for purposes of pay or retirement: And provided further, That in discharging and recommissioning officers in inverse order of standing on the promotion list any officer who is once discharged from the grade he now holds and is recommissioned in the next lower grade shall be passed over.

SEC. 2. That the retired general officers who have been called to active duty for service on the said elimination board shall be entitled from date of detail and while so serving to the active pay and allowances of their grade.

SEC. 3. That the first proviso under the heading "Arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., for field service, National Guard" in title 1 of said act is amended to read as follows: "That members of the National Guard and Officers' Reserve Corps who have or shall become entitled for continuous period of less than one month to Federal pay at the rates fixed for the Regular Army, whether by virtue of a call by the President, of attendance at school or maneuver, or of any other cause, and whose accounts have not yet been settled, shall receive such pay for each day of such period; and the 31st day of a calendar month shall not be excluded from the computation."

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws in so far as they are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

During the reading—

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEGG. When was that bill put on the Calendar? We can not get any copies of it.

The SPEAKER. Probably the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] can answer that question.

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not interrupt the reading of the bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. The bill is not on the Calendar. It was introduced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] a few days ago.

Mr. BEGG. "A few days ago." How many days ago?

Mr. WINGO. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a second.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], the ranking minority member of the committee, is entitled to recognition to demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Mississippi opposed to the bill?

Mr. QUIN. I am. I am not going to fight the bill. Of course I am opposed to this number of officers, but I have demanded a second for the purpose of having control in opposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the rule he should recognize some one who is opposed to the bill, as he is sure the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is.

Mr. QUIN. I am opposed to the bill, although I say I am not going to fight it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] that he defer consideration of the bill for a while until we can have a chance to get copies of it. I find that copies are not available now.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is the Anthony bill, slightly modified.

Mr. McKENZIE. There certainly must be copies of the bill in the document room.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he should recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] to demand a second.

Mr. QUIN. I demand a second.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] is entitled to 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter. Will the gentleman consider the propriety of asking unanimous consent for an extension of the debate on this proposition?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not think we want any considerable debate. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, if I may have your attention for just two or three minutes I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and others who have been greatly interested in this bill.

You well remember that the reorganization act of 1920 provided for approximately 17,000 officers. In an attempt to fill up all of the grades we found that we could not get the officers, and as a matter of fact we found ourselves without any first or second lieutenants. An agitation started up to reduce the number of commissioned officers in the Army. That was taken up in this House, and General Pershing even wrote a letter suggesting that the number be reduced immediately to 12,000, with permission to increase the number to 13,000 later on by commissioning men in the Army.

While the bill recommended by General Pershing was pending in the Committee on Military Affairs the Committee on Appropriations took up this matter when appropriating the money for the pay of the Army, and undertook to solve it. They did some very hard work, and they provided in that bill that the total number of officers should be reduced to 12,000. They fixed the numbers in the grades, and provided also that the officers to be dismissed from the Army should be taken care of in three ways—by elimination, by demotion, and by being put into a reservoir to be absorbed hereafter as vacancies occurred.

In the Senate the bill was amended. In conference it was changed somewhat. The conference report was agreed to. A board to pass on these officers was provided. When the board undertook to administer this law they found it did not work out just as perhaps the House intended and as Congress intended, or as the Army intended.

The act of June 30, 1922, which provides for the reduction in the commissioned strength of the Regular Army, fixes the new strength at not to exceed a total of 12,000 officers and prescribes new authorized strengths for each of the grades of promotion list officers from colonel to second lieutenants, inclusive. The old authorized strength in these grades was based on an Army of something over 17,000 officers. The new authorized strength prescribed in the act of June 30, 1922, is based on a total strength of 12,000 officers, so that the problem of reduction was not only one of reducing the Army to a total of 12,000 officers but also included reducing the actual number of officers in each of the various grades to accord with the new authorized strengths. The methods for bringing about these reductions are elimination, which includes both retirements and discharges; absorption, which is holding additional officers in the various grades until they become absorbed by subsequent losses; and demotion, or forcing officers of any grade into the next lower grade.

Under the terms of the act of June 30 there was no restriction placed on the board as to the number of officers that could be disposed of by the first of these methods—that is, by elimination—except, of course, that officers could not be eliminated in excess of the surplus as determined by the new authorized strengths in the various grades. The number of officers that could be disposed of by the other two methods, namely, by absorption and by demotion, is limited by the act of June 30 to a total of 800. The fixing of this maximum of 800 which could be disposed of by absorption and by demotion operates to fix the minimum that must be disposed of by elimination. Under the War Department's interpretation of the effect of this limitation this minimum, based on the actual strength in the various grades of the Army on June 30, 1922, was 1,349 promotion-list officers. This would require the elimination from the Army of many good officers. It is for the purpose of correcting this situation that H. R. 12493 is now being considered. This bill provides that the limit of 800, so far as it affects demotion, is removed and that the Board of General Officers shall make the required reduction by means of elimination and demotion.

This bill gives the President the power, upon the recommendation of the board, to readjust the authorized strengths of the various grades. This power is very limited in its scope, but it will operate to meet those conditions which seem to make desirable some less elimination and demotion than would otherwise be necessary. The omission of an authorization to hold surplus officers for absorption and the granting of the power to readjust the grades and to demote without a restricting limit will bring about a condition on January 1, 1923, with every officer in the Army serving in his proper grade, without any additional or surplus officers in any grade, with promotions resumed on that date in all grades (most of these, of course, for some time will be the demoted officers getting back into the grade from which demoted) and with the total strength of the Army on that date not exceeding the authorized maximum fixed in the act of June 30, 1922, of 12,000 officers. The Board of General Officers under the terms of H. R. 12493 is given great latitude in determining the number of officers that shall be eliminated and the number that shall be demoted. It should be made clear that the present bill does not in any way change the situation with respect to the medical officers, the dentists, the veterinarians, and the chaplains. The present bill is concerned only with the promotion-list officers. So far as the grade of colonel is concerned the President, upon the recommendation of the Board of General Officers, is authorized to increase permanently the number of promotion-list colonels by not to exceed 50, which would make the maximum number 470 instead of retaining temporarily, as it might do under the act of June 30, 1922, as surplus in the grade of colonel whatever number of colonels it desired to so retain. So far as the lieutenant colonels are concerned the proposed bill makes no change from the act of June 30, 1922, except that no surplus lieutenant colonels can be retained for absorption. In the grades of major, captain, and first and second lieutenant the bill changes the act of June 30 to the extent that it authorizes the President, upon the recommendation of the Board of General Officers, to increase permanently the authorized strength of majors by not more than 150, which would make the maximum number 1,725, and the authorized strength of captains by not more than 300, which would make the maximum number 3,450, and to make corresponding reductions in the authorized strengths of the grades of first and second lieutenants. In view of these authorizations the bill removes the authority contained in the act of June 30 to hold temporarily any additional or surplus officers in any of these four grades.

There is some ground for the belief that a demoted officer will, by some arbitrary ruling, lose his pay status by reason of being discharged in order to be recommissioned in the lower grades. With several hundred officers being demoted, such a situation would be demoralizing. Besides, the only purpose in this matter is to reduce the strength of the Army and to suitably redistribute the officers in grades. It is enough of a hardship for the officer to lose his grade without a reduction in pay. Moreover, it is a fundamental principle of recent pay legislation that pay is based upon length of service. In demoting an officer his rank is changed but his length of service remains the same. Manifestly he should not suffer a reduction of pay unless this fundamental principle of the pay law is to be violated. H. R. 12493 definitely safeguards the pay rights of the demoted officer. The officers who are subject to demotion have barely had time to adjust themselves to the reduction in their pay brought about by the recent pay legislation, and it would be most demoralizing for them to be now subjected to a further reduction.

It was the intent of the act of June 30, 1922, that no officer be demoted more than one grade. It now appears that due to certain peculiarities of the promotion list a situation may arise that would subject some officers to a second demotion. This was never contemplated and should not occur. The last proviso of section 1 of H. R. 12493 will prevent it.

The board of general officers convened to carry out the readjustment in the Army consists of two retired major generals and three general officers of the active list. Existing law is construed to prevent the two retired general officers from receiving the active pay or the allowances of their grade while on this active duty. They are serving voluntarily, having at considerable inconvenience to themselves consented to serve as members of the board. Section 2 of H. R. 12493 authorizes them to have the pay and allowances of their grade while in active service on this important duty.

Section 3 of H. R. 12493 has been inserted simply to place officers of the Organized Reserve on the same basis as National Guard officers in so far as the right to be paid for the 31st day of any month is concerned. Without such a provision, reserve officers called to active duty for 15 days may receive only 14 days' pay.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] who handled the appropriation bill in the House introduced this bill for the purpose of curing this difficulty. The gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] also introduced a bill to underake to remedy the evil. We have now before us the bill introduced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] with one or two minor amendments. This bill is to provide that the number of officers shall be reduced by January 1, 1923, to 12,000, and that they shall be distributed in the grades as provided in this bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. MCKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The paper this morning said that the men whose rank was reduced would draw the pay of the higher grade after they were reduced in rank.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is true under this bill. The fact is that these officers will be demoted to lower grades and remain there until promotion can take place. Under the bill of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] the even flow of promotion will be carried on after January 1, and I want to say this in conclusion and then I will yield the floor. This is a distressing situation at best. These men, many of them young men, were invited into the Army of the United States, hoping to make this their life work. Now that Congress has decided that the number shall be reduced to 12,000 officers in the Army, some of them must be eliminated, and others must be demoted in order to get the number down to the 12,000. Under either bill the situation is distressing to these officers, to the men who will be put out. We realize that; but I am firmly convinced that the bill introduced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] which provides for demotion and elimination rather than fixing a reservoir for absorption, which would block promotion for an indefinite time, is the better bill.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that it is the unanimous report of the members of the Military Affairs Committee who were present at the hearing on the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman state how many there were present?

Mr. McKENZIE. I think there were eight or nine.

Mr. ANTHONY. Eleven.

Mr. McKENZIE. There had been 11, but not all present at one time.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand it, this bill does not increase the number of officers in the Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. It does not.

Mr. GARNER. And it does contain the provision that when you demote a man he shall draw the salary that he received before demotion.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is true under the law. The pay is based on length of service rather than on grade.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand this bill, it makes no different provision from that of the present law to the pay of officers?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; it does not.

Mr. GARNER. And it does not increase the number of officers of the Army?

Mr. McKENZIE. It does not; it reduces them.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does it not increase the demotions?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. It will not cost any more under this bill?

Mr. McKENZIE. It will not cost as much, because we will demote some of these officers rather than retire them.

Mr. RANKIN. The number demoted will be increased under the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield? Is it not a fact that the policy of the House as fixed in the appropriation bill is not changed, the total is the same, and the expenses are the same, but it is simply changing the machinery by which the result is to be accomplished, and that is slightly modified for the interest of the service?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; it is simply a change of the machinery, to which no one can make a valid objection. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the reason why this remedial legislation is necessary lies in the fact that after the War Department appropriation bill was passed by the House a few months ago, went to the Senate, and went to conference, the War Department objected to what they considered the rather drastic provisions of the House bill. In order to relieve the situation the conferees accepted a recommendation from representatives of the War Department in regard to the creation of a reservoir of 800 officers to be carried additional in their grade while they were being either absorbed or demoted.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman explain where this difficulty came in—the difference between the House bill and the Senate and the arrangement by the conferees?

Mr. ANTHONY. I intend to do that.

Mr. QUIN. The difference between the House bill and the Senate is what they want to get at.

Mr. ANTHONY. The language suggested from the department read not more than 800 may be so carried as additional in the various grades. In the construction placed on the language by the Judge Advocate General he ruled that not more than a total of 800 officers could either be absorbed or demoted. The bill as it passed the House intended that a great many more officers should be demoted. But under the construction of the language it would have required a balance surplus in their grades of about 1,300 officers to have been eliminated or discharged from the Army. So by the bill now before you we correct the error made in limiting the number to be absorbed or demoted to not more than 800. This mistake was made by the War Department, and while we increase by 500 the number of officers to be carried in the different grades, we provide that by January 1 the total number of commissioned officers must not exceed 12,000, as provided in the appropriation act of June 30. We further provide that the intention of the House in its measure of June 30 shall be carried out and the officers surplus in the grades shall be demoted, so that there will be no more in the grades January 1 than authorized by law.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. While the number of officers are not increased by the bill, it authorizes the President to increase the majors, colonels, and captains?

Mr. MADDEN. It does away with the reservoir.

Mr. ANTHONY. It does away with the reservoir of 800 officers and authorizes the demotion of about 1,600 officers in the various grades, and from this we will again more nearly balance the numbers in the grades to what they should be.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Under this bill, will the expense of the Army be greater than it is under the present law?

Mr. ANTHONY. It will not. The officers of the Army are paid according to the length of service, and not according to rank. The comptroller has prepared a decision which, I understand, will soon be rendered, to the effect that in the demotion of an officer to be discharged from the grade; for instance, of a captain, in order to be recommissioned as a lieutenant, the comptroller has ruled that even if there is an interval of a minute between these two commissions he has left the Army, and he loses all benefit of his previous service. So this is designed to correct that.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that the appropriation bill for 1923-24 will not be any greater by virtue of this law than if it was not enacted?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think not. The virtue of the bill is that the Army will again have a balanced list of officers for the first time for many years. We will again have a considerable number of second lieutenants, but we still leave room for the class at West Point of probably 250, and the commission of several hundred new officers who will come in as the result of examinations now being held for the grade of second lieutenant, and on January 1 you will have some semblance of balance.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for the purpose of my asking a question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if he agrees with the gentleman from Kansas that as a result of this legislation Congress will not have to increase the expense under the present law?

Mr. MADDEN. I agree with the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKS. What was the number of officers provided for in the appropriation bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. Twelve thousand.

Mr. SPEAKS. And this will not increase the number of officers?

Mr. ANTHONY. Absolutely not.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, of course I can not favor this bill. I do not believe in any such number of officers. I voted against the bill creating 12,000 officers. I thought at that time, and I think now, that the United States Army ought not to have over 7,000 officers and not over 50,000 enlisted men. But, anyway, the majority of Congress did not agree with me when they created this number of officers and appropriated for them.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] that this does not increase the number of officers?

Mr. QUIN. I do not think it increases the number of officers, but I believe it is going to increase the amount of money, because they provide for a greater number of majors and colonels, and so forth.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman agree that they are paid by the length of service?

Mr. QUIN. I think that is so under the law.

Mr. GARNER. Would it change the compensation of the officers of the Army?

Mr. QUIN. It will not change the compensation, except that this provides for some of them to be promoted to the higher grades, and that will be an increase in Army pay and Army officers.

Mr. GARNER. As I understood the gentleman, he agreed with the gentleman that the higher Army pay is now based on longevity service.

Mr. QUIN. If you give a captain a majorship, of course his salary is increased. And under this bill it is bound to increase. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when he analyzes it, is bound to see it is going to take some additional money.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The statement has been made here several times this morning that the pay of the officer is based on his time in the service. The gentleman says that is true, and then turns around and says there is going to be an increase of colonels and majors, and if they are promoted to higher rank they will get more pay.

Mr. QUIN. If a captain is in the Army 30 years, and then goes up to major, do you not know that his pay will be more?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Not if his pay is based on the length of service.

Mr. QUIN. Of course it is. You can not expect a major in the United States Army to serve on the salary that a captain serves on, and when you draw down the Treasury certificate of the pay of the second lieutenant you know it is less than that of captain, and that of a colonel is more than that of a first lieutenant.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does my colleague realize that a man who has served in the Army as a first lieutenant under the pay bill might by length of service get more money than his captain? As a matter of fact, it does not depend upon grade at all.

Mr. QUIN. You are going to say it does not depend on grade. When you get the pay certificate from the Treasury of the Army officer you are going to see that those that are promoted to higher positions will naturally draw more money than they would if they held lower positions.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does not this bill provide for the demotion of a good many officers who would otherwise under the old bill have retired and get retired pay in addition to the new officer that would come in; and so we really save in this bill by keeping the old man in?

Mr. QUIN. That may be one element that may come in. It was the intention of the bill that was passed, as I understood it, to retire these officers and get them down to the number that Congress agreed should be in the Army. And no doubt at that stage of the game the United States Army, through its General Staff, wanted a higher number. And men on this floor stated that you were ruining the Army because we were reducing the number of officers and retiring them.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I yield.

Mr. WINGO. While Congress intended to reduce the number and demote some of them, it was not the spirit of the law, was it, that a man by being taken from, say, a majorship and demoted to captain should lose his longevity pay? Congress did not intend that?

Mr. QUIN. Congress did not intend that he should lose his longevity pay, but, as I understood it, it did not intend he should draw the pay of a major while serving as a captain.

Mr. WINGO. Here is the point: Congress did not intend, from the effect of the ruling that has been made, that the way of demotion would be by the way of separating a man from service as a major and recommissioning him as a captain? I understand that a decision has been made that if that is done he will lose his longevity. This bill will cure that. Congress did not intend he would lose that.

Mr. QUIN. These gentlemen who are anxious to take care of the great number of officers may not have intended it. What I intended to do was to cut all off the pay roll that I could.

Mr. WINGO. You intended, no doubt, to demote certain of the higher grade officers?

Mr. QUIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINGO. Did you intend in that demotion that they would lose the benefit of the provisions of the law giving additional pay for longevity service?

Mr. QUIN. For my part, I did not.

Mr. WINGO. Now, this bill will not, then, do anything more on that particular point than to carry out the original intent?

Mr. QUIN. They come up and say that the Comptroller of the Treasury has made a ruling nullifying what was intended by Congress. Since they can make such peculiar rulings, I do not want to vote for any bill on this floor that is going to let them reach down into the Treasury and take out more money on any kind of a subterfuge. An Army officer is entitled to his pay, like you and me, and ought to have it.

Mr. WINGO. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] have assured this House that the appropriation bill that will be offered next year for the Army, so far as officer pay is concerned, will not by this bill be increased one single dollar. Does the gentleman differ with them? If so, wherein are they wrong? I do not care so much about the mechanics as I do about the part of the cost to the Government. If the number remains the same, and the cost remains the same, what do we care about the minute details of arriving at their reclassification?

Mr. QUIN. If the gentleman will look at the increase in the colonels and the majors he is bound to see it is going to draw a large proportion of increase out of the Treasury of the United States in salary.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There is no proposition for an increase in the commissioned personnel in this bill. It rearranges and redistributes the men already limited to a 12,000 total.

Mr. QUIN. Do you not increase the number of colonels?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Not over the present law.

Mr. QUIN. You look at the number, and——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I mean over the Army reorganization act. Over the figure of the Army appropriation bill there is some change. On the other hand, this bill offsets that by providing for demotions. It is 50 on one side and 50 on the other. It saves some retirement pay and is a matter of the redistribution in the grades, that is all; but, at least, it is as economical as the present law provided by the appropriation bill, and those who have had most to do with the details figure in odd ways there is a saving.

Mr. QUIN. Yes; you say a saving. I have heard that word "saving." I saw in the newspapers that the Republican administration claims it has saved $4,000,000,000. The taxpayers have not found out where they saved it. But when you come to this bill in the next Congress, calling for an appropriation, you will see you were fooled on the 1st of September, 1922, when they said it would not cost any more money. Do you believe that this bill is not going to cost any more cash? Do not come up under the pretense that it is not going to cost the taxpayers any more money. Let us be honest to ourselves at least, and let us not try to fool anybody.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to try to find out what this bill does. If I understand the gentleman correctly, one thing it does is to bridge over the interval between the discharge of a man in a certain rank and his reappointment to a lower rank. Is that true? Is that one of the things it does?

Mr. QUIN. Yes. This bill, under a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, will be a saving to that class of officers on the longevity pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. You say it provides for a certain number of appointments to the higher grades that are not carried in the present law. Is that true?

Mr. QUIN. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. BARKLEY. If this bill passes, in conjunction with the present law and the appropriation bill, if a man is demoted from major to captain, under the longevity-pay provisions he has to draw a captain's salary, but continues to draw longevity as a major?

Mr. QUIN. No. He will not continue to draw a major's pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. What does he draw?

Mr. QUIN. It would take some fine old classic Greek mathematician to figure out what it would amount to. You can put that in your pipe and smoke it. [Laughter.] You can rest assured that the Army officers are not coming before Congress and asking us to reduce their pay. [Laughter.] Do you not know that? They do not come here to get their pay reduced, as some gentlemen are trying to make you believe. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. In spite of the longevity provisions of the present law, if a major is promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel he does not continue to draw a major's pay based on longevity, but draws the pay of lieutenant colonel.

Mr. QUIN. He gets a lieutenant colonel's pay, and it starts his longevity pay as a lieutenant colonel, and when he gets to be a colonel he gets longevity pay as a colonel, and when he gets to be a brigadier general he gets the pay of a brigadier general and starts the longevity pay of a brigadier general, and so on up.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it possible under the law for a major, taking into consideration longevity pay, to get as much as a colonel? You say no, but others say yes. What is the truth?

Mr. QUIN. A colonel of the Army draws a colonel's pay, and a major of the Army draws a major's pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. But as I understand it, all colonels and all majors do not draw the same amount of pay.

Mr. QUIN. Yes; that is true. It depends on the longevity.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that a major might, by length of service, draw more pay than a lieutenant colonel or a colonel with shorter service?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is the contention of the proponents of this bill that Army pay is based on longevity of service, regardless of rank. If that is true there could arise a case where a first lieutenant would draw more than a lieutenant colonel, provided he was in the service a sufficient time longer.

Mr. QUIN. No; there is too much difference there. A first lieutenant could not draw as much pay as a lieutenant colonel. But it is a fact that they come up with all these technicalities to Congress and fool a lot of you into voting for them. I want a record vote on this bill in order to see how many Members are going to agree to this being done.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes. I want to get a record vote. I do not want to get a pitchfork out here and go after it in any rough manner. I am simply explaining the bill so that all you people will know how to vote. [Laughter.] The fact is that Army legislation, as explained by one gentleman, is an exceedingly technical matter. You can take the average Army appropriation bill as it was drawn when the Committee on Military Affairs had charge of it, and it would require many different kinds of experts to analyze the bill and to understand every different provision in it.

Now, since the appropriation feature has gone away from the Committee on Military Affairs and has been lodged in the custody of the Committee on Appropriations, and they have some gentlemen on there who were on the Committee on Military Affairs for a number of years, I can not tell you what they are doing; and for that reason I believe this House ought to know what it is doing when it votes to correct what they call "a mistake." And as long as the present method continues, where you have one committee saying what the size of the Army shall be and passing Army legislation, and another committee saying what amount of money shall be appropriated, and practically eliminating all the work of the Committee on Military Affairs, you can expect to have just such a jumbled-up mess as this. It is bound to continue. [Laughter].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. As I understand it, this bill preserves the longevity pay of the officers in transferring them from one grade to another?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would it not be possible for this bill to do that without making 50 more colonels and 50 more majors and 100 more captains? Could you not strike that out of the bill, and still carry the longevity pay from one grade to another?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Permit me to say that the changes in grade have no relation to that phase of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I know; but could you not provide in this bill for longevity pay being transferred with the grades and still not reach the result that the gentleman from Mississippi thinks it will reach?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That simply means a change of method. The former act provided that you could have a lot of extra majors and colonels and captains over the number specified, and they should come into the Army by absorption, as it is called. It has been provided that there should be no absorption of extra numbers, but that the number in a grade should be permanently increased up to that limitation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would it not save money under this bill if you struck out the provision for the 50 colonels and the 150 majors?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No; because the other way you would have them retired eventually.

Mr. QUIN. Of course it would save money. Do you not know that you can not increase the number of colonels and majors on the same amount of money? If you do not have them, you are bound to say that that is so. When you demote a man on his longevity pay, if he has been in the Army long enough, his pay might accidentally cover enough to equal the pay of the higher grades, but you can not put a man up from a lower grade into a higher grade without increasing the expense on the taxpayers of this country to save your life. [Applause.] Every man knows that. The last time we had this bill up they did not have a second lieutenant in the United States Army, notwithstanding the fact that there were 17,000 officers. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY]. [Applause.]

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, after the very lucid explanation of the technicalities of this bill to which we have just listened by the eminent gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], I recognize the fact that it would be superfluous for me to take up the time of the House in going into the details of the measure. I am in favor of this bill. I hope it will be enacted. It was introduced for the purpose of correcting an inadvertent error of the House in the enactment of the Army appropriation bill. It will not increase the number of officers authorized by that act. Neither will it increase the appropriation by the expenditure of one more dollar than is provided in the Army appropriation bill, but it probably will result in a saving.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CURRY. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is a lot of confusion as to whether there is an increase in the number of officers in the higher grades. Is that true or not?

Mr. CURRY. Yes. But a readjustment of the number of officers in the several grades is necessitated by the reduction in the size of the Army personnel. This should have been done before.

Mr. BARKLEY. To what extent, if the higher grades are increased, will that increase the expenditures or call for an increased appropriation?

Mr. CURRY. Not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not?

Mr. CURRY. This bill does not interfere at all with the longevity pay. A colonel reduced to the grade of a major under this bill would still receive the same pay he received as colonel. A captain reduced to the grade of lieutenant would still receive the same pay he received as captain. The pay is fixed according to length of service under the McKenzie Act.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Will not that result in the captain who is reduced to that rank from that of a major receiving more pay than he otherwise would receive? If not, why is it necessary to put into the bill that his pay and allowances shall not be decreased by reason of his demotion?

Mr. CURRY. I do not know any particular reason for putting that in the bill. Probably, however, to make it explicit and to prevent its being technically misconstrued. I believe the McKenzie Act provides for that.

I introduced a bill along the same lines of the Anthony bill some days before this bill was introduced. It had the effect of inducing action. I am not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I want to explain why I introduced that bill.

My attention was called, through conversations, letters, and press comments, to the demoralizing effect of the practical operation of the act carrying the appropriations for the Army. Under the provisions of that act the War Department appointed a plucking board. The operations of the plucking board absolutely disturbed the harmony and morale of the Army officers. No officer knew exactly where he stood and was fearful of what might happen to him. Probably five or six officers in the Army were sure of being retained, namely, General Pershing and the members of the plucking board who are still on the active list. No one else knew anything about what was going to happen to him. The plucking was not along the line of efficiency or service, but this plucking board could take anyone they wanted to and throw him out of the Army and reduce anyone that they wanted to.

Under the Army appropriation act, 1,716 officers of the Army would be dropped from the Army. This would naturally reduce the strength of the officer personnel below the authorized 12,000. It would then be necessary to fill up to the authorized strength by bringing in lieutenants from civil life, by examination, many of whom would know practically nothing of the military science, and none of whom would be as efficient as the recognized efficient officers dropped. It is known that there are a certain number of inefficient officers in the Army whose services can well be dispensed with, but this struck at efficient as well as inefficient officers. The lieutenants thus brought in would have to be thoroughly trained in the various service schools, and at great expense, and it would be many years before they reached the point of efficiency attained by those they replaced.

The bill that I introduced, the passage of which was recommended by Secretary of War Weeks, in an official report to the Committee on Military Affairs, endeavored to solve this problem in the following manner: It permitted the dropping of officers adjudged inefficient by the plucking board. It permitted the reduction in rank of officers adjudged efficient as officers but not yet fully qualified for the rank they hold. It permitted the retention of officers in their rank when held efficient by the board and eminently qualified for that rank. The retention of officers in their rank was permitted even above the numbers provided for that grade. Thus they would be retained in that grade until gradually absorbed in numbers.

The three elements entering into my bill were thus reduction, absorption, and elimination.

Mr. ANTHONY's bill provides only for reduction and elimination.

The result will be the same, practically, because those reduced in rank will be the first promoted in either bill.

The committee felt, I believe, that there would be less stagnation of promotion under the Anthony bill. This, however, does not hold true, because the officers who are promoted will be those who were demoted, and the promotion of the others will be no more rapid. The only thing is that they will be demoted in rank, and that will, of course, affect their morale and their influence with their men, without in the least affecting their pay. Then when promotion comes it will simply be returning to them the rank they were long since entitled to. My bill provided for the gradual absorption of these officers in their grades until by promotion of those highest on the lists the numbers in the grades would be reduced to the authorized strength. It is not material, except in so far as I hold it to be less advantageous to the morale of the officers.

It is the pride of position that I tried to maintain in my bill. This House is organized along the lines of seniority on both sides and on all the committees. Any member of a committee would feel humiliated if he should lose his place on the committee. If the chairman of a committee was supplanted he would feel humiliated. The member who was entitled to a chairmanship, if not appointed to that chairmanship, would feel humiliated. So the proposition of dollars and cents is not all that is to be considered in this matter or in any walk in life. A captain in the Army has not the same control over the men as a colonel, and a lieutenant has not the same control over the men as a captain; and if an officer is doing a captain's duty in a lieutenant's position he does not have the same control or power over his men as though he held the position of a captain. Furthermore, when you reduce an officer but continue him in the same assignment it will affect the respect in which his men hold him. I believe my bill is better than this one; but we need action, and we need it now to save the absolute destruction of the morale of the officers of the Army. I believe this bill will accomplish that. Most of the features of my bill have been incorporated in the Anthony bill. As we have it, it is practically the same, except the feature of absorption, and I believe the board of general officers, with the consent of the President, under the Anthony bill has been given the power to develop this method in a limited degree.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Do I understand that under the present law the pay of the officers is based on longevity regardless of rank?

Mr. CURRY. It is.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is the longevity pay of a major greater than that of a captain?

Mr. CURRY. Does the gentleman mean under the operations of this bill?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; or under the present law.

Mr. CURRY. It might be and it might not be.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Military Affairs are agreed upon the wisdom of this bill. It is intended to prevent the dismissal of officers who by reason of their experience and qualifications are to-day needed to put in force the provisions of the national defense act on which the future peace of this Nation may depend.

The bill also meets a curious situation that has just arisen under the Army appropriation act. An old law provides that for computing officers' pay each month shall have 30 days only, and that where a month has a 31st day it shall not be counted, thus raising the question of "When is a day not a day?"

The Sixty-second Division, the Reserve Cavalry of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, were ordered to Camp Meade, with their consent, for the 15 days' annual training provided by Congress. If they had been ordered from the 1st or 2d or 3d of a month for 15 days, a day would not have been "lost" out of the calendar, but they happened to be ordered for duty from August 20 to September 3, and since there was an outlaw "31st" day included the comptroller decided that that day ceased to exist for these men who were training to serve their country and stated he could authorize pay for 14 but not for 15 days. Although this may seem absurd, an amendment to the law is needed to save the 15th day for those reservists of the Sixty-second Division, who were ordered for duty with pay, and others who are to-day in training in various parts of the United States. I therefore yesterday offered before the Military Affairs Committee the following amendment to the original Anthony bill:

SEC. 3. That the first proviso under the heading "Arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., for field service, National Guard," in Title I of such act is amended to read as follows: "That members of the National Guard and the Organized Reserves who have or shall become entitled for a continuous period of less than one month to Federal pay at the rate fixed for Regular Army, whether by virtue of a call by the President, or attendance at school, or maneuvers, or of any other cause, and whose accounts have not yet been settled, shall receive such pay for each day of such period; and the 31st day of a calendar month shall not be excluded from the computation."

General Martin, commanding Camp Meade, and Colonel Langhorne, chief of staff of the Sixty-second Division, had taken up the matter promptly, and the following communications explain fully the necessity of the provision in the pending bill:

HEADQUARTERS SIXTY-SECOND CAVALRY DIVISION,
Camp Meade, Md., August 30, 1922.

Subject: Pay of reserve officers, Sixty-second Cavalry Division, for the 15 days' annual training.

To: The commanding general, Third Corps Area, Baltimore, Md.

1. In compliance with instructions from corps area headquarters, 58 officers of the Sixty-second Cavalry Division were ordered to Camp Meade to report there for their 15 days' annual training prescribed by the national defense act of June 4, 1920, and S. R. 43, 1921.

2. The order was worded according to the form sent from your headquarters, which specifically requires their services for 15 days, August 20 to September 3. These officers came with the understanding that they were to be paid for 15 days' service. Yesterday the finance officer at Camp Meade sent a clerk to assist in making out the pay vouchers of the reserve officers in order to avoid irregularities and to facilitate payment. He stated that he could not pay these officers for the 31st day of August.

3. We are now placed in a most embarrassing position. These officers in good faith will have fulfilled their contract for the full 15 days' service and the Army will be in a position of refusing to pay them for 1 of these 15 days.

4. It is very important that this matter be settled immediately, as the officers are paid, according to the program, on Saturday, September 2, to enable them to return to their homes by September 3.

G. T. LANGHORNE, Chief of Staff.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CORPS AREA,
Baltimore, Md., August 30, 1922.

To the Adjutant General of the Army, Washington, D. C.:

1. It is understood that the refusal of the finance officer at Camp Meade, Md., to pay the reserve officers in question for the 31st day of August is based upon the telegram from the The Adjutant General of the Army to the commanding general Third Corps Area, dated July 12, 1922, reading as follows:

"The law excludes the thirty-first day of any calendar month from computation of pay of reserve officers called to active duty for training period. For example: Reserve officers on active duty from July 18 to August 1, only entitled to 14 days' pay. Members of National Guard when serving as such and entitled to Federal pay at rates fixed for Regular Army, receive pay for thirty-first day of month under authority contained in annual appropriation acts. Notify those concerned."

2. While Section 37-a of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920, provides that a reserve officer "shall receive the same pay and allowances of an officer of the Regular Army" it is believed that the rule that the thirty-first day of a month shall not be computed in calculating pay of an officer of the Regular Army is not applicable to the case of a reserve officer called to active duty under the provisions of the Army appropriation act of June 30, 1922 (Public, No. 259, 67th Cong.), which provides:

"That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended for the pay of a reserve officer on active duty for a longer period than 15 days," etc.

It is believed that in the enactment of the latter-quoted provision, Congress intended that each reserve officer should be paid for each day of active service (not exceeding 15 days in the fiscal year).

3. It is to be said that the reserve officers in question have expected to receive pay for each day's active service (not exceeding 15 days) and it has been the view of those having immediate charge of their instruction that they would be so paid, the said telegram not having come to the attention of any of them. Failure to pay them for each day's service will, it is feared, be considered by the reserve officers as a breach of good faith.

4. It is requested that decision be made of the question and communicated to these headquarters by September 2, 1922, at the latest.

For the corps area commander:

FRANK S. COCHEU, Chief of Staff.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD CORPS AREA,
OFFICE OF THE FINANCE OFFICER.
Baltimore, July 13, 1922.

No. 241–240.
Subject: Pay.
To: Finance Officer, Camp Meade, Md.

1. The following telegram from The Adjutant General of the Army to the commanding general Third Corps Area, dated July 12, 1922, is quoted for your information and guidance:

"The law excludes the thirty-first day of any calendar month from computation of pay of reserve officers called to active duty for training period. For example, reserve officers on active duty from July 18 to August 1 only entitled to 14 days' pay. Members of National Guard, when serving as such and entitled to Federal pay at rates fixed for Regular Army, receive pay for thirty-first day of month under authority contained in annual appropriation acts. Notify those concerned."

R. S. OFFLEY, Finance Officer.

The War Department yesterday decided that the proposed correction would be necessary. The pending bill will put the organized reserves on the same basis as the National Guard, and I feel sure you will pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing the latest quotations of the American Woolen Co. on wool, and to make a statement in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, how long are these quotations of the American Woolen Co.?

Mr. MORGAN. I think about three-fourths of a column in the newspaper, and I desire to make some statements in regard to the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, next spring's quotations on woolens of the American Woolen Co. and statements in connection therewith, as published in the Daily News Record, New York, N. Y., August 1, are as follows:

AMERICAN WOOLEN CO. OPENS WORSTEDS AT ATTRACTIVE PRICES.

The American Woolen Co. opened yesterday in department 1, division B, department 2, and department 7, the lines of fancy weave piece dyes, mixtures, fancy worsteds, etc., at prices generally regarded in the trade as being very attractive.

The lowest priced, all worsted fancy worsted, is quoted at $1.47½ a yard, is 2-ply, both ways, contrast warp and filling. This cloth is made by the Riverside mill, range No. 8139, the entire range being quoted at $1.47½ to $1.60 a yard. This is regarded as being an exceptionally good value. The lowest priced fancy worsted last year was quoted at $1.77½ a yard, and the same fabric this year is quoted at $1.55.

An analysis of the showing of the lines of fancy worsted in department 2 reveals the fact that, whereas last year 25 per cent were below $2.50 a yard, this year 75 per cent are below $2.50 a yard. Out of 15 numbers selected for purposes of comparison, which are repeated from last year, 11 show declines in prices of 2½ cents to 22½ cents and 4 advances of from 2½ cents to 10 cents a yard.

There was the greatest amount of interest in the market over the opening, because all manufacturers of fancy worsteds have been awaiting this development. Under ordinary circumstances, serges are taken as the cue for the attitude to be maintained throughout the fancy worsted field, but this season, because there is so little interest in serges, the tendency is to watch the fancy worsted development. The problem of supplying the machinery with enough fancy worsted business to last for a season is not an easy one. Some regard the low prices as an attempt to offset the tendency of the market toward a day-to-day basis and constant style fluctuation.

The lines, however, are attractively styled and represent the latest developments in this respect. On the other hand, some observers question whether there is enough business to go around, and with some of the largest corporations in the business idle, the company is bidding for enough business to run its machinery. One of the problems of the fancy worsted business this season is to secure enough business on fancies to furnish business for staple machinery. Hence, there is an attempt to reach out and compromise the conditions by meeting the consumer's idea of price.

The outlook for a very successful season for the worsted department of the company is excellent. The response that has been experienced to the offerings of tropicals is very reassuring, and although the market has not been inclined to believe all that has been claimed of the success of the tropicals in department 2, they have done a very good business. What the competition did not realize is that the lines were shown in all out-of-town markets as soon as opened, and many buyers who have not been here at all purchased their requirements there.

The response to yesterday's opening was very gratifying. If it was true of the offerings of serges that meeting the prices of the big company would be exceptionally difficult, it would be more than ever so in connection with the fancy worsteds, judging by the general comment.

Following are 15 numbers that have been repeated this year, which furnish comparisons:

In view that the emergency tariff rate on wool is 36⅜ per cent per scoured pound higher than the pending rate adopted by the Senate of 33 cents, it is interesting to note declines in prices quoted by the American Woolen Co. It disproves the statements of importers who have admitted that they are selling agents for foreign manufacturers and certain officials who have for political purposes attempted to deceive the American public as to the effect the pending rate of 33 cents will have upon the consumer over wool admitted free of duty. The following statement was checked up by an expert on wool and woolens and found to be correct:

From 100 pounds of clean wool there will be obtained, on the average, from the cloth and waste sold the equivalent of about 66⅔ pounds of cloth. Dividing by 66⅔ is the same as adding 50 per cent; therefore adding 50 per cent to the value of a pound of scoured wool will give the value of a pound of wool in cloth after allowing for waste in manufacture. An increased cost of 33 cents per pound of clean wool therefore means an increased cost of 33 by 1½, or 49½ cents—say 49 in round figures—per pound of wool in the cloth.

Assuming the average weight of wool cloth to be 12 ounces per linear yard, an increased cost of 49 cents a pound means an increased cost of twelve-sixteenths of 49, or 36¾ cents per linear yard. Calculating on 3½ yards to the average suit, the increased cost over free wool would be $1.28 per suit.

It will be important to note that the increased cost of $1.28 per suit based on a 33-cent rate is for a high-class product. The lower-priced suits would be on an average much less. That English manufacturers do not regard the 33-cent rate on wool and the pending rate on woolens of serious consequence is evidenced by the following, which was published in the Daily News Record of New York, August 20:

UNITED STATES RETAILERS SAID TO BE BUYING MORE CLOTHING IN ENGLAND—EXECUTIVE DECLARES MANUFACTURERS MAKING MORE EFFORTS TO GAIN AMERICAN TRADE.

[London Bureau Daily News Record.]

LONDON, August 19.—Purchase of British clothing for American account are increasing, and this season has seen many new buyers whose small individual orders have swollen the aggregate, said the executive of a large American buying agency here, who comes in close contact with the men's clothing buyers for most of the important retail establishments in the United States. This man made the comment in connection with the Government's announcement that shipments of British outergarments to America in July exceeded those of any other month in the year.

"We hear your tariff may go through in a few weeks," he said, "but we have heard that so frequently we are not paying much attention to it, and my observations are that the British manufacturers are going after the American trade with more of a push than they have displayed before. Old houses which have been satisfied with a small South American, South African, and Australian trade in addition to their domestic outlet are putting what your people call 'pep' into their operations, and I have numerous inquiries from manufacturers for responsible representatives to handle their lines in America.

"This organization is now shipping to several stores in the United States overcoats made of crombie, 28-ounce, check-backed cloth, which can be landed in the neighborhood of $30. They are excellent for the American trade. More care is being paid by manufacturers to their workmanship, and from what your buyers over here tell me the prestige of British goods and the quality of the fabrics will quite easily offset the extra costs necessitated by tariff charges."

That agriculture is one of the main sources of natural wealth is generally conceded by economists and close students of industrial and economic conditions. Mr. E. H. Gary, president of the United States Steel Corporation, is considered an authority on economics and industrial questions. In an interview given to the Chicago press, published August 30, he said:

The farm communities of all the States are still the backbone of the Nation.

At the present time, however, farmers are paying too much for productive costs and receiving too little for their products.

Mr. Gary, as well as every other good forecaster, realizes that the prosperity of our Nation largely rests upon our basic industry—agriculture. It is upon the relation that the buying power of agriculture bears to our total productive wealth that prosperity and economic balance depend. Statistics show that normally the agricultural purchasing power is approximately 35 per cent of our total productive wealth, and that by reason of the operation of the Underwood free trade law and the contraction of credit in the spring of 1920 its purchasing power was reduced over 30 per cent, or to less than 20 per cent of our total productive wealth, which remained on that basis until the enactment of the emergency tariff law and the reenactment of the War Finance Corporation act, extending loans to farming interests.

It is apparent from Mr. Gary's statement that he realizes the necessity of restoring the purchasing power of agriculture to its normal relation, and that unless it is so restored adverse industrial conditions will prevail.

The question is, What is the proper rate on wool? It naturally would be, according to our sound economic tariff system, the difference in the cost of production between this and competitive countries. The Tariff Commission reported:

The raw-wool production cost in Argentina at 27.35 cents per pound and the range cost in the United States at 45 cents, a difference of 17.65 cents per pound, which on a 50 per cent shrinkage basis would be 35.30 cents per pound. Fifty per cent is used, because this is about the average shrinkage of wool imported under the emergency tariff act. It would require a tariff rate of 35.30 cents per pound on this basis to cover the difference between cost in the United States and Argentina, which is the highest production cost competitive country.

Wool production is an essential industry not only because sheep graze on a territory for which there is no probable substitute, and the land utilized for this purpose can not be used for any other profitable purpose, but because of the fact that in case this industry is destroyed, which it will be if a tariff rate is not adopted equal to the difference in cost of production between this and foreign countries, or adequate to its need, prices will rise abroad because of the decreased supply incident to the destruction of the industry. It is, therefore, highly important that the consumer be not deceived by the attempts of propagandists who are spreading propaganda in the interest of the maintenance of the immense profits they are now enjoying through the importation of foreign manufactured cloth that has been sold to the consumer at higher prices than those quoted by the American Woolen Co., and at higher prices than will ultimately prevail if the proposed 33-cent rate is adopted.

The destruction of American industries through importations enhances prices and results in the building up of foreign industries. The selfish purposes of those giving wide publicity to erroneous statements concerning the effect the pending rate and the objects of certain politicians who are supporting these propagandists for political purposes with erroneous statements will be discredited by the American consumers. They through experiences have learned to their detriment that they are not beneficiaries of the low production and foreign market costs of products that are imported under free trade, but are the victims of a system of profiteering which Mr. Gary correctly states "is a bar to progress"; and that their ability to purchase products and the necessaries of life under such a system is so decreased and so out of relation that they can not sell their energy or products at prices that will enable them to enjoy the benefits and living conditions that prevail under a sound tariff system.

The benefits of the emergency tariff act are apparent. There seems to be a general feeling that industrial activities will continue to increase and that prosperity will be witnessed when agricultural and industrial conditions become stabilized, which depends upon the adoption of proper tariff rates, and it is obvious that the 33-cent rate on wool is necessary and will adjust itself ultimately on a basis beneficial both to producer and consumer by retaining the sheep and wool industry which is essential to our prosperity and progress.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In view of the fact that we have been unable to obtain copies of this bill, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be read again.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended?

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that in his opinion two-thirds had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two Members present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members. As many as are in favor of suspending the rules and passing the bill will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 34, answered "present" 1, not voting 212, as follows:

LAC DU FLAMBEAU BAND OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6428) for the enrollment and allotment of members of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas, in the State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJUSTING ACCOUNTS OF DIPLOMATIC OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7764) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust certain accounts of certain diplomatic and consular officers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I left a sick bed against the advice of my physician and came here to vote against the Winslow coal bill. I was so anxious to vote against it that I overlooked the fact that I had a general pair with my beloved colleague, Mr. CLARK of Florida. I desire to make this statement in order to set him right in the RECORD. I have leave to extend my remarks on that bill, and shall shortly insert my reasons for opposing it.

AMENDING SECTION 100 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10817) to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, can we have an understanding that this bill will not be called up for consideration until the judiciary bill for the appointment of new judges, now in conference, upon which this bill is conditioned, is passed?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. So far as I am concerned, I will not call it up.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection; but this bill is conditioned upon the passage of that bill, and we should not pass a bill conditioned on the passage of another bill.

MARKING OF ANCHORAGE GROUNDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 2199, an act to provide for the marking of anchorage grounds in waters of the United States.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the Commissioner of Lighthouses shall provide, establish, and maintain, out of the annual appropriations for the Lighthouse Service, buoys or other suitable marks for marking anchorage grounds for vessels in waters of the United States, when such anchorage grounds have been defined and established by proper authority in accordance with the laws of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "law" and insert "the laws of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER—BENWOOD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11901) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River to connect the city of Benwood, W. Va., and the city of Bellaire, Ohio.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, to and into the city of Benwood, Union District, county of Marshall, in the State of West Virginia, from the central part of the city of Bellaire, county of Belmont, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CONFERRING JURISDICTION ON THE TERRITORIAL COURTS OF PORTO RICO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9270) to confer upon the Territorial courts of Porto Rico concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts of that district of all offenses under the national prohibition act and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill explain to the House the criminal jurisdiction of the Territorial magistrates in Porto Rico?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the Territorial courts of Porto Rico are very like our own throughout the United States. The municipal and justice of the peace courts, as known in the United States, have original jurisdiction up to a certain amount, and in all cases the district court has appellate jurisdiction.

Mr. STAFFORD. It occurred to me whether we should extend the national jurisdiction as carried in the prohibition act to these municipal districts and Territorial magistrates which are similar to our justices of the peace. There would be no objection to conferring jurisdiction on courts of record.

Mr. TOWNER. The right of appeal lies just as it does in the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was wondering whether those in favor of the enforcement of the prohibition act would be in favor of a tribunal like a justice of the peace, or think that that was a proper tribunal to try violations of the national prohibition act?

Mr. TOWNER. They would not have it, except in the same cases they have in the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if this bill extends the operation of the national prohibition act to Porto Rico?

Mr. TOWNER. No; it is already extended. The Supreme Court of Porto Rico has said that all of the cases must be tried in the United States court, and there is only one United States court. Really this is for the benefit of the people who are charged with the violation of the prohibition act, because they have to come 40 and 50 miles to attend the United States court, and in many cases they have to walk.

I think the conditions are such as you will say that the parties, those in favor of the enforcement and those who are opposed to the enforcement, are in favor of this bill, because it affords a ready means to those charged with violations of the law to have their cases tried.

Mr. ROSSDALE. My objection would be to any further extension of the act, to any additional territory under the American flag.

Mr. TOWNER. The extension is already made.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I simply want to say to the chairman that my understanding is that this bill relieves the Federal circuit courts of police cases?

Mr. TOWNER. That is it.

Mr. HILL. And it puts violations of the Volstead Act as police offenses and not as high treason? Is that it? I am for the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. In substance, that is correct. I do not agree entirely with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Territorial magistrates and courts of Porto Rico jurisdiction concurrent with the commissioners and courts of the United States for the said Territory of all offenses under the act of October 28, 1919, known as the national prohibition act, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, the jurisdiction of said Territorial magistrates and courts over said offenses to be the same which they now have over other criminal offenses within their jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF SECTION 18A, OIL LEASING ACT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2460) to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat., p. 437), to certain lands in Utah.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois). Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I see the gentleman who reported the bill is in the Chamber. I wish to inquire why these persons should be granted the additional privilege of another 12 months to that which they had under the act of February 25, 1920, when they had the privilege of 12 months to have their claims adjusted?

Mr. COLTON. That is the very point. If the gentleman will notice, they did not have the privilege. The act of February 20, section 18a, extended its privileges only to the lands that were withdrawn September 27, 1909, and these lands were not withdrawn until October 4, 1909, just seven days later. If the act had said "September 27, 1909, and October 4, 1909," then there would be no objection. But the date of the withdrawal was just one week later, and excluded them from the provisions of section 18a.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under that explanation, Mr. Speaker, I think there should be no objection to the act. When I read the bill and the report it was not very clear why these claimants were not in the purview of section 18a of the oil leasing act. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the period of 12 months from and after the approval of this act the provisions of section 18a of an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. p. 437), be, and the same are hereby, extended to land in Utah embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued October 4, 1909: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as otherwise enlarging, continuing, or extending the provisions of the aforesaid section 18a of the act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. p. 437).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill having been read the third time was passed.

OFFICIAL REPORTS FROM PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 21 of the act of Congress, approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress, the report of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, together with the reports of the heads of the various departments and bureaus of the Philippine Government for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1921.

I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of War as to the printing of this report as a congressional document.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 1, 1922.

CLAIMS OF PRIVATE PARTIES TO MARIVELES QUARRY, P. I.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate Joint Resolution 23, authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles Quarry within the limits of a United States military reservation in the Philippine Islands and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto, provided military necessities permit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I certainly would object strenuously to the Senate joint resolution, but have no objection to the substituted amendment. However, I believe there might be some corrective phraseology in the amendment so far as the granting of licenses is concerned, in where it states "upon such conditions." Would it not be better to say "such terms and conditions"?

Mr. HILL. I think that would improve the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee substitute be reported instead of the Senate provision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the committee substitute be reported in lieu of the original resolution. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant revocable licenses for the quarrying and removal of stone from the Mariveles Military Reservation, Philippine Islands, to the Government of the Philippine Islands and to persons and corporations in the Philippine Islands upon such conditions as may be fixed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment: Page 2, line 16, after the word "such," insert the words "terms and." So that it will read "upon such terms and conditions."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HILL: Page 2, line 16, after the word "such," insert "terms and."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. Was not the committee amendment correctly reported?

Mr. HILL. The committee amendment was correctly reported, but the words "terms and" would not do any harm, and they prevent any misunderstanding in the future. So they are accepted. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the committee amendment to the resolution as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Without objection the title was amended to read as follows:

Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the quarrying and removal of stone from the Mariveles Military Reservation, Philippine Islands.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill by printing the committee report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have an objection to that. I do not see the necessity of printing the committee report on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HOTEL ON FORT MONROE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (S. J. Res. 156) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to erect and maintain a hotel upon the Fort Monroe Military Reservation in Virginia.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, before the objecting stage is passed I wish to inquire whether the committee considered the condition, not of a total destruction by fire but of a partial destruction of the property as a condition of its being rebuilt? I notice in the proviso the following language—

That after the expiration of the grant herein authorized, or in case at any time previous thereto, the building hereby authorized is destroyed by other casualty, then all buildings erected or other installations made on said site or the remains thereof shall be removed and the site restored—

And so forth.

Now, suppose the building is only partially destroyed by fire. What is to be the status of the occupation of the premises under which the authority is given by the Government to have a building erected there?

Mr. HULL. I presume that would rest with the Secretary of War. He must make the lease under which the hotel corporation is to operate, and I presume that in the lease provision must be made for that contingency.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can conceive very readily, Mr. Speaker, of there being a partial destruction of the premises, where the owners might be desirous of continuing the lease by rebuilding and yet here we have the absolute language which provides in case the property is destroyed by fire. Does that not mean totally destroyed? I have prepared an amendment, which I submit to the consideration of the gentlemon from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], who is directly interested, inasmuch as the property is in his district, to see if they have any objection to it, because I can see that it might be helpful to the tenant and to the Government. I have prepared an amendment so that the sentence beginning on line 3 of page 2 would read as follows:

That after the expiration of the grant herein authorized, or in case at any time previous thereto the building hereby authorized is so totally destroyed by fire or other casualty as not in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the owner to be capable or profitable, respectively, to be rebuilt, then all buildings erected or other installations made on said site or the remains thereof shall be removed and the site restored at the expense of the then owner or owners of such hotel to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, whenever he shall so direct, unless such grant at the expiration of the term, or in case of the rebuilding by reason of partial or total destruction by fire or other casualty, shall be renewed for another term not exceeding 50 years, which authority is hereby granted to the Secretary of War, in his discretion.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. The only objection that occurs to me at this time is that this bill as prepared was made the subject of legislation by the General Assembly of Virginia, which is in the exact terms of the bill that is being considered here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I would not attempt to delay the consideration of this bill by projecting the amendment, even though I think it would be helpful to the bill and meet the conditions that might arise. I have other amendments that I have prepared to offer to the bill, but I will not offer them, and I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reservation of the objection is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to such individuals or corporation as to him may seem proper to construct, operate, and maintain a hotel upon the Fort Monroe Military Reservation in Virginia, for a term not exceeding 50 years, upon such site, according to such plans and dimensions and subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the State of Virginia, by its general assembly and governor, shall by proper legal enactment give the consent of such State to the construction, operation, and maintenance of such hotel: Provided further, That after the expiration of the grant herein authorized, or in case at any time previous thereto the building hereby authorized is destroyed by fire or other casualty, then all buildings erected or other installations made on said site or the remains thereof shall be removed and the site restored at the expense of the then owner or owners of such hotel to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, whenever he shall so direct, unless such grant shall be renewed for another term not exceeding 50 years, which renewal is hereby authorized in the discretion of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That no claim for damages against the United States shall be made by reason of the enforcement of any conditions or restrictions which have been approved by the Secretary of War or by reason of the removal of buildings and installations and restoration of the site thereof: And provided further, That the buildings so erected shall be subject to State, local, and national taxation as other property located in the county of Elizabeth City, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INCORPORATION OF THE AMERICAN MATHEMATICAL SOCIETY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9218) to incorporate the American Mathematical Society.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not very much enamored of this policy of Congress incorporating certain designated individuals who happen to be members of a voluntary society and giving them a national charter simply because they have organized themselves for some scientific purpose. I know of a great number of such societies in the country. Unless some good reason can be advanced why an exception should be made as to this society, I shall be inclined to object.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa, or to the gentleman from Minnesota, or to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman from Wisconsin raises a point that we often have to consider. One of the particular reasons why this association ought to be incorporated is because of the fact that it is intended to become a part of the international association, and in order to do that it is desired that it should have the sanction of the United States Government. This is the condition: This mathematical society——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean that this society can not obtain recognition by the international society unless it has a national incorporation?

Mr. TOWNER. That is exactly it. All the other national associations that belong to the international association have national incorporations.

Mr. STAFFORD. And a requirement of the international association is that the subsidiary orders must have national incorporations in order to be recognized?

Mr. TOWNER. I understand that to be the rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has anything like that statement been made before the committee in advocacy of this measure?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know of it. What I want to say is this: The European Governments have, from the dawn of history, incorporated associations of this kind for the purpose of encouraging progress in science, art, literature, and things of that kind. In almost every European country the government contributes money to-day for the support of those societies, and it does seem that when an association of this kind comes along and asks only this one thing—an incorporation—we ought to yield to that extent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, suppose the American Automotive Engineers or the American Chemical Society should come and ask the same thing?

Mr. CURRY. They are not scientific. They are business organizations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes. The automotive engineers have no mercenary purposes.

Mr. CURRY. They have for the production of automobiles and the sale of automobiles.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. The gentleman evidently is not acquainted with the purposes of the American Automotive Engineers.

Mr. CURRY. This society is composed of scientists in the United States, the greatest mathematicians in the world.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If a scientific engineering society sought national incorporation, I think the same reasoning would apply to it, and I think it would be proper to be incorporated.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think we should be incorporating every voluntary society that chooses to ask for it.

Mr. CURRY. Neither do I.

Mr. LAYTON. I think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. We should not give a national charter to it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The only way in which we can give any national character whatever to any of these scientific organizations in this country is by this method of national incorporation. In that way we place them on a par with other national associations of like character.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the matter of issuing national charters to various organizations has been brought up here at different times for the last 10 or 15 years. There are certain Members of Congress who have never voted for national charters for any kind of an organization, whether soldiers or scientific, or whatever it may be. It does seem to me that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and his committee ought to consider the question of passing a general statute authorizing national incorporation for certain purposes, and limiting those purposes. Until you do that, as far as I am concerned, you are never going to get unanimous consent to consider such bills in this House, and I am going to vote against them whenever they come up, it makes no difference what they are. You ought, however, to pass a general statute under which people under certain conditions can have the right to incorporate without having to come to Congress to get special legislation enacted.

Mr. CURRY. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. GARNER. I will say to my friend from California that this applies to anything of this kind that may come up. I know that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and several other gentlemen in the House feel the same way about it, that there is no necessity for national charters, or if there is that there ought to be a general law.

Mr. CURRY. There is a necessity for national charters for some organizations.

Mr. GARNER. That necessity ought to be met as a matter of right under a general law, and not as a matter of grace by asking for special legislation.

Mr. CURRY. I think the gentleman is right as far as that is concerned, and I hope such a general law may be enacted; but at the present time it is not on the statute books of the Nation, and the only way in which this association can get what it ought to have is by an act of Congress.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is a law on the statute books which permits the incorporation in the District of Columbia of societies for certain purposes.

Mr. CURRY. That is simply for the formation of a District of Columbia corporation, which is like a State corporation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand that includes charitable, benevolent, and scientific organizations.

Mr. CURRY. That is simply for the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Texas. And this is a scientific organization.

Mr. CURRY. That is simply incorporation in the District of Columbia and not for the United States.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is an organization in the National Capital.

Mr. CURRY. That is not a Federal corporation. Incorporation in the District of Columbia is the same as incorporation in a State, and if this society should be incorporated in that way, instead of making a report to Congress, as it should, it would have to make reports to all the States in the Union and all the Territories and also to the District of Columbia. That is hardly fair for a corporation of this kind. This is the same kind of a corporation as the Smithsonian Institution, on the same lines, and it ought to be permitted to incorporate. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman does not mean to say that if it was incorporated in the District of Columbia under the District of Columbia law it would have to make reports to all the different States.

Mr. CURRY. The State laws themselves require that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They do not require it of charitable and benevolent associations.

Mr. CURRY. A corporation of the District of Columbia doing business in the District of Columbia must have an agent down there and also make report to the secretary of state of Texas.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Let me say that it has been the custom for many years to incorporate a great many different societies. I think Congress has incorporated some 30 or 40 of them. They have come to Congress and sought incorporation for a great many different purposes—lodges, churches, charitable, religious, scientific, and every other purpose that you can think of. The committee has concluded, and has acted upon the determination for quite a long time, that it would not incorporate except in special cases. It has felt that in view of the precedents in foreign countries we ought to do what they do, which is to incorporate scientific, literary, and art associations of a national character. It does seem to me that we ought not to object on an arbitrary ground. These organizations get quite an advantage by getting national charters, and it seems to me that where they have no rivals and are doing valuable service we ought to be willing to give them that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In foreign countries are they incorporated under a general law, or does each one require a special act?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They are incorporated by special charters which are granted to them, and are supported by their Governments which levy taxes for their support. Here we only ask for incorporation, and I think gentlemen ought not to stand on mere technical objections.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Minnesota has just stated that these organizations secure Government help. Is that the purpose and intention of this corporation?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; there is no provision for the payment of a penny. All they ask is that the Congress incorporate them.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to call attention to the fact that there are quite a number of these organizations, and as quick as they become international organizations, then they come in and ask for salaried officers at the expense of the Government.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Not one of them that we have ever incorporated has so far as I know ever come here to ask for a penny.

Mr. CURRY. I would not father a bill of that kind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARNER. I object.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas permit the bill to remain on the calendar?

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection to that. I merely made the statement that since I have been in Congress I have never voted for a proposition for the national incorporation of anything and that I would not permit it to come up on the floor of the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. CURRY. It would be a very good precedent if the gentleman would either vote for this, withdraw his objection, or retire to the cloak room, but if he will not and as he intends to object to the present consideration of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed and remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WHITE HOUSE POLICE FORCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3659) to create the White House police force, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over for two weeks without prejudice.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say to my friend from Wisconsin that I think the probabilities are that two weeks from now there will be no chance to take up the bill. It has been unanimously reported by our committee, and the report shows very clearly why this legislation is desired. The President wants it; it is a matter of economy and involves good business principles. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his request.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold my request temporarily under the reservation of the right to object. I should like to inquire why the guards at the White House should be put on a different pensionable status than the park police?

Mr. LANGLEY. The main purpose of this bill is to put the White House police force directly under the supervision of the President, or an officer designated by him and responsible directly to him.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman did not answer my question. I asked the gentleman why there should be a different pensionable status for the guards at the White House than for the park police?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand the gentleman, but my colleague on the committee [Mr. CHINDBLOM] has given this question very thorough study, and I yield to him to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What provision in the bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. STAFFORD. The reading of the bill shows that these men who are to be given permanent status as guards at the White House are to receive a different pensionable status from the United States park police. You are giving the guards at the White House, who have not the same jeopardizing work as the members of the Metropolitan police force, the same pensionable rights as the police force of the city. Why can not these guards who are to be appointed be in the same purview as the park police?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say this to the gentleman: These men who serve at the White House will have necessary expenditures for their personal appearance which will not be incurred by members of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. STAFFORD. I take issue with the gentleman. The men who are members of the park police have the same expenditures to meet.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not necessarily.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, I know they do.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I wonder if the gentleman and the House are aware—I doubt if the country is aware—that up to the present moment the men on duty in the White House Grounds, who are charged with the policing of the White House Grounds and who are responsible for the safety of the President and his family, and to that extent of the National Government, are under the control of the superintendent of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, and that the President of the United States can not issue an order to them, can not make a request of them, can do nothing with regard to their conduct without communicating with the superintendent of the Metropolitan police?

Mr. STAFFORD. Answering for myself, I am thoroughly conversant with the fact, and it is stated in the report. The gentleman has not answered the question which I propounded to the gentleman from Kentucky, and who yielded to the gentleman from Illinois to answer.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I consider that a minor question. When the bill comes up, that may be a subject of amendment. My recollection is—it has been some time since the matter was before the committee—that the only difference relates to 2½ per cent of the total pay they receive.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is correct in that statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I read this bill and considered it, I recognized the potency of having guards at the White House under the direction and control of the President, or of an official under the President. Now, we have the park police that guard the various parks throughout the District under the supervision of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. Why is it not feasible, instead of creating a distinct force, to increase the present force that is now under the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and who is himself under the direction of the President of the United States? Colonel Sherrill is the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and he has charge of the White House, and why not increase that force rather than bring into a separate force men who were placed there during an emergency? We never had any policemen around the White House in such numbers prior to the World War.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman overlook the fact that the net result of the proposed legislation is to decrease the expenses for this police force by about 40 per cent? The difference as stated by the gentleman from Illinois is only 2½ per cent——

Mr. STAFFORD (interrupting). Oh, a few cents or a few hundreds or a million does not amount to anything as far as the gentleman from Kentucky is concerned. He is for the flag and an appropriation. That is his record in Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I am proud of that record, because I have always tried to see to it that my people get their just share, and I shall continue to stand by it in the next Congress, of which I am to be a Member [applause], whether the gentleman likes it or not, or is in the next Congress or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am complimenting the gentleman because he stands by the flag and an appropriation; I never knew him to do anything else.

Mr. LANGLEY. And you never will if the appropriation is needed. I thank the gentleman for his compliment.

Mr. BEGG. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls for the regular order. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, if you are going to press me to a finality, I will object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BEGG. The regular order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3659) to create the White House police force, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created and established for the protection of the Executive Mansion and grounds in the District of Columbia a permanent police force, to be known as the White House police. Such force shall be under the sole control of the President and under the direct supervision of such officer as he may designate. The members of such force shall possess privileges and powers and perform duties similar to those of the members of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, and such additional privileges, powers, and duties as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 2 (a) That the White House police force shall consist of one first sergeant with grade corresponding to that of detective sergeant (Metropolitan police), two sergeants with grade coresponding to that of sergeant (Metropolitan police), and 30 privates with grade corresponding to that of private, class 3 (Metropolitan police), appointed under the direction of the President from the members of the Metropolitan police force and the United States park police force from lists furnished by the officers in charge of such forces. Vacancies shall be filled in the same manner.

(b) Any vacancy in the Metropolitan police force or in the United States park police force caused by appointments to the White House police force shall be filled in the manner provided by law.

SEC. 3. (a) That no person shall be appointed a member of the White House police force at a grade lower than the grade held by him as a member of the Metropolitan police force or of the United States park police force at the time of his appointment.

(b) A member of the White House police force shall receive a salary at the rate provided for the corresponding grade in the Metropolitan police force, and he shall be furnished with uniforms and other necessary equipment similar to the uniforms and equipment furnished the United States park police, and he shall be entitled to the same leave allowances as a member of the United States park police force.

(c) The President may transfer a member of the White House police force to the organization of which he was a member at the time of his appointment to such force.

SEC. 4. (a) That a member of the United States park police force appointed to the White House police force shall be included within the provisions of section 12 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved September 1, 1916, as amended, upon payment into the policemen and firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia, of an amount equal to 1½ per cent of the total basic salary received by him since September 1, 1916, as a member of such United States park police force and as a watchman of the United States in any public square or reservation of the District of Columbia.

(b) For the purposes of retirement under such act service with the United States park police force and service as a watchman of the United States in any public square or reservation of the District of Columbia shall be deemed service with the White House police force.

(c) Any member of the Metropolitan police force appointed to the White House police force shall continue to be subject to the provisions of section 12 of such act, and appointment of such member to the White House police force or transfer of such member to his former organization shall not affect any right, privilege, or duty of such member under the provisions of such section of such act.

SEC. 5. That a member of the United States park police force appointed to the White House police force shall be paid a refund as provided for in section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, as amended, and upon transfer to the United States park police force he shall be paid a refund from the policemen and firemen's relief fund of all money paid by him as salary deductions into such fund, and he shall be reinstated and included within the provisions of such act upon payment to the Secretary of the Treasury of an amount equal to the amount refunded to him, at the time of such appointment, under the provisions of section 11 of such act, plus an amount equal to 2½ per cent of the total basic salary received by him during the period of his service as a member of the White House police force. For the purposes of retirement under such act service with the White House police force shall be deemed service with the United States park police force.

SEC. 6. That the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1906, and of section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, shall not apply to persons appointed or transferred under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That the amounts necessary for the payment of salaries and for the purchase of uniforms and other equipment of the White House police force shall be disbursed by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That the provisions of this act shall be in effect on and after July 1, 1922.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin for 20 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, repeating somewhat the comments I made a few moments ago, the main purpose of the bill is to place directly under the supervision of the President the police force which guards the White House. As has already been stated, he has now no control over this force whatever but must go to the superintendent of the Metropolitan police force for whatever he wants done. Incidentally, I may remark that it will result in the net saving of $25,000 to $30,000 a year in the White House force by reason of the reduction provided in this bill. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that there is any opposition to it. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not question the position taken by the gentleman reporting this bill that there are altogether too many men acting as guards about the White House. There was some need of having 54 men guard the White House during the unsettled conditions of the war. But if there are 54 men still guarding the White House there are too many guards and the fault lies with some one, particularly the chief of police of the District. Perhaps there should be some special guard under the direct appointment of the President, under his direct control. I suggested in the previous interrogatory that that could be accomplished by increasing the present park police and have them interchangeable. We do not have a special force connected with the messengers detailed to the White House. The present park police is under the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, Colonel Sherrill, and if we increase the force by 20 it would provide adequate personnel to guard the White House in time of peace. When the President is not occupying the White House, these men could be given their vacation in connection with the park police. But the purpose now is to continue the guard that was had during the war to guard the White House—that we shall continue that force permanently. Everyone knows that the duties of guarding the White House are not so dangerous as the duties of the Metropolitan police force. You are going to create 30, with 8 hours a day, 7 in a shift. It is not easy for me to conceive how 7 would be needed, but I surrender my opinion on that. The President is many times absent from the White House, and it would be more economical for the Government to have them a part of the park police force and under the charge of Colonel Sherrill than a separate force, as is purposed by this bill.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely.

Mr. YOUNG. Will that mean that different ones will select these men? Should not these men be selected without reference to the duty?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. Colonel Sherrill, Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, has the selection of the park police. These men are the same as you see about the Mall, about Potomac Park, and all the other squares. He has the selection of them. They are under his immediate supervision, and so many are detailed to each park. What do you find here? There was need during the war of having the White House specially guarded—good need for it. Now, it has been difficult since peace times to get rid of that guard. They have got hold of the teat and are still holding on. It is proverbial with Government positions, and applies to the House of Representatives, I am glad to say, so far as I am concerned, as to other public places.

Mr. LANGLEY. I understand the gentleman to pay a tribute to the intelligence of Colonel Sherrill and his capacity for taking charge of all that force. I beg to call his attention to the fact, and I agree with all that he says about the efficiency and high character and ability of Colonel Sherrill, that he, knowing the situation as the gentleman says—and I agree that he does—earnestly recommends the enactment of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that at the hearings on this bill Colonel Sherrill suggested detailing some of the Army enlisted men that are now doing service at Fort Myer to do this work?

Mr. LANGLEY. I never heard of it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. STAFFORD. What committee was it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not know. It was not before our committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have heard it stated authoritatively that he did. I do not agree with that policy. But it was in connection with the question of creating a force to take care of the situation.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman seems to have a copy of the bill. I have been unable to get one. I want to ask him whether these policemen are to be under the civil service or whether they will be appointed by the President?

Mr. STAFFORD. They merely continue the present force. It is an easy position down there to act as guard, in one of the finest uniforms of the District's policemen. There is no danger at all.

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not agree with the gentleman. I think it is a difficult position.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean it is difficult to stand idle all the day long?

Mr. McKENZIE. I mean with all the people who go down there and want to go through the White House.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not apply to those. The gentleman does not seem to be acquainted with the conditions at the White House.

Mr. LONDON. I would like to inquire how many police departments there are in the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Two.

Mr. LONDON. What are they?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Metropolitan police and the park police.

Mr. LONDON. What is the Capitol police force; who appoints them?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is a distinct force.

Mr. LANGLEY. And we also want a distinct force at the White House.

Mr. LONDON. Are any of these police officers civil-service employees?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, all the Metropolitan police and the park police are in the civil service.

Mr. LONDON. Was it contended that the officers under this bill will be appointed under the civil service?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the bill, the President will retain those now doing duty and take one from those now acting in the park police, and when there is a vacancy he has the privilege to take them from the Metropolitan force or the park police.

Mr. LONDON. What is the immediate necessity for establishing this prætorian guard?

Mr. STAFFORD. Merely because it was used during the war, and it is very difficult to have any reduction or discontinuance in a public force when it is once established.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I think some of the cobwebs, spun by this discussion, ought to be brushed away. In the first place, the members of this police force are to be taken from the Metropolitan police and the park police. There is to be no new establishment whatever. The men are to be selected from the men who are now in the Metropolitan police and in the park police force and who have attained their status through civil service. The officer in charge is to be selected by the President and assigned by him for that purpose. Now, under the present conditions, as the report shows, if the committee will read the letter from Colonel Sherrill to myself, there is no question that the officer who will be designated by the President to be the chief of this force will be Colonel Sherrill himself. At the present time, as I said a moment ago, the superintendent of the Metropolitan police is in control of all of these men. The President can not do anything with regard to the conduct, the behavior, the assignments, or the routine duties of any of them. He must seek assistance, he must direct his inquiries, and try to obtain the changes which he desires in the operations of the police, through the superintendent of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will.

Mr. EVANS. Will it not be a fact if this bill is adopted that the park police, the Metropolitan police, and the White House police, will in the entirety have 30 more members than are now in the police department?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They will not. The White House force will have 24 less members.

Mr. EVANS. That is, the Metropolitan police, plus the park police, plus the White House police, will have 30 more policemen than are now doing all the work?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I can not understand the gentleman's mathematics at all. There will be 24 less men at the White House, 24 more in the Metropolitan police department, and the same number of men in the entire service.

Mr. VAILE. When we incorporate this mathematical society, the gentleman from Nebraska should be a member of it.

Mr. KING. The gentleman has stated that the President has no power of removal of any of these policemen?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly not.

Mr. KING. Would he be permitted to remove a Democrat for pernicious activity?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have not found that he is disposed to do that, but I think some gentlemen on our side of the House think he ought to have that privilege.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think he ought to exercise it a little bit more than he does.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not altogether agree with the gentleman on that. However, I want to discuss this bill seriously.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to ask what I hope is a sensible inquiry.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In the first section of the bill you say that the members of such force shall possess privileges and powers and perform duties similar to those of the members of the Metropolitan police. Well, in my way of looking at it, to perform duties similar to some other duties does not mean anything, does it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They will be altogether under the officer who is designated by the President to be the chief of this police service. Of course, they will take their orders from him, and they will be subject to the regulations prescribed by him.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What powers are they going to have?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They will have police powers and they will be under the management of the officer designated by the President to the chief of the police service at the White House.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I believe that is true, but nowhere in the bill can I find any expression of the powers of this force except in the first section.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I dare say the gentleman will not find any other statute in which provision is made for the appointment of the Metropolitan police or the park police—any detailed statement of their powers and duties. They are under the direction of the superintendent.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I was wondering whether it would be the right language.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I was wondering if it would do to say that they should have the same powers.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This bill had the unanimous support of the Senate committee. It was adopted unanimously by the Senate. It had the unanimous support of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House. The President and the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds are very anxious for the speedy enactment of this legislation. Then why delay for such a trifling thing?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, if the gentleman is satisfied with it, I am.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CONVEYANCE OF PRESQUE ISLE, ERIE, PA., TO THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10144) conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owners, for public-park purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman interested in this bill—and I see present the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], who reported the bill—why should the National Government donate back to the city of Erie or to the State of Pennsylvania property that the State of Pennsylvania donated to the Government some 50 years ago?

Mr. CRAGO. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the State of Pennsylvania gave this to the United States Government at a time when the State of Pennsylvania did not intend to beautify it or use it for park purposes. Now the city of Erie, in cooperation with the State commission, plans to beautify this and make it a public recreation park.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the National Government, if the gentleman will permit, received some property of value without condition 50 years ago. Now it is of value. Why should the National Government now return the property, although it is to be used as a public park?

Mr. CRAGO. We are only loaning it to the State of Pennsylvania in order that it may be turned into a public park, and the State of Pennsylvania will return it whenever the United States Government desires to use it for any other purpose. Then it can be taken back.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then will the gentleman have any objection, in the last proviso, line 21 of page 3, to the insertion after the word "lighthouse" of the words "or other governmental purposes"?

Mr. CRAGO. We would be entirely satisfied to have that amendment made.

Mr. STAFFORD. And, on page 3, line 14, would he have any objection to inserting "at any time" after the word "event"?

Mr. CRAGO. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the reservation. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whereas the United States acquired by deed of May 25, 1871, pursuant to the act of the Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania approved May 11, 1871, the possession and custody of the peninsula of Presque Isle, at Erie, Pa., to be held by said United States as near as may be in its present condition and only for the purpose of national defense and for the protection of the harbor of Erie, but in all other respects to be subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the State of Pennsylvania, as by said act fully and at large appears; and

Whereas by an act of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, approved May 27, 1921, certain lands of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, known as Presque Isle Peninsula, and the approachments thereto situated in the city and county of Erie, Pa., are dedicated and devoted to the use of the public to the end that said Presque Isle Peninsula be preserved, maintained, improved, and forever held as an historic memorial and public State park at Erie, aiding in the development of the harbor at Erie, and creating a commission to manage and control said lands and harbor improvements under the name and style of the Pennsylvania State Park and Harbor Commission of Erie, and providing, inter alia, that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania does hereby dedicate to the use of the public all of the peninsula of Presque Isle, and the land covered by water adjacent thereto, subject nevertheless to the rights heretofore acquired by the commission of the water works of the city of Erie, the Department of Fisheries of Pennsylvania, and certain rights of the Department of Commerce to use two strips of the said peninsula of Presque Isle for lighthouse purposes, with right of ingress and egress thereto and therefrom, as by said act will fully and at large appear:

Now, therefore, in furtherance of and for facilitating the objects and purposes of the aforesaid act of the State of Pennsylvania, approved May 27, 1921, the United States hereby grants, quitclaims, and reconveys to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania all of its right, title, and interest in and to the peninsula of Presque Isle at Erie, Pa., acquired by the United States under and by virtue of the act of Assembly of said Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, approved May 11, 1971 (Public Law 731), authorizing the conveyance of said peninsula of Presque Isle to the United States, subject nevertheless to the rights on said peninsula of Presque Isle heretofore granted by the United States to the commission of the water works of the city of Erie, Pa., to the Department of Fisheries of Pennsylvania, and to the Department of Commerce for lighthouse purposes.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 3, after line 13, insert: "Provided, That in the event the said lands are not used for public park purposes the same shall revert to the Government of the United States: And provided further, That the land shall be subject to the right of the United States to at any and all times and in any manner assume control of, hold, use, and occupy without license, consent, or leave from said State any or all of said lands for any and all military, naval, or lighthouse purposes, free from any conveyances, charges, encumbrances, or liens made, created, permitted, or sanctioned thereon by said State."

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman wants to amend the committee amendment, does he not?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes. I want to amend the committee amendment, on line 14, page 3, by inserting the words "at any time" after the word "event"; and on line 21, after the word "lighthouse," I would insert the words "or other," so that it will read "or other purposes"; and in line 20—this is all one amendment—strike out the word "or" after the word "naval."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAGO to the committee amendment: On page 3, line 14, after the word "event" insert "at any time"; and on line 20 strike out the word "or" where it occurs the second time; and in line 21, after the word "lighthouse," insert "or other."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, in order that the bill may be shortened, I move to strike out the preamble beginning on line 3 of page 1, after the word "that"; strike out all the language on page 1 and on page 2, and line 1 of page 3 as far as "May 27, 1921," so that the bill will read, "That the United States hereby grants," and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAGO:
Beginning on page 1, after the word "That," in line 3, strike out all the remainder of page 1, all of page 2, and line 1 of page 3 to the figures "1921" and the comma.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill conveying the peninsula at Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public-park purposes."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CAREY SEGREGATION 11.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3195) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept completion of Carey Segregation No. 11 and to issue patent therefor.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FLOATING DRY DOCK, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9053) to provide for the leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to authority being vested in the Secretary of the Navy to lease this floating dry dock. The thought occurred to me that he should have authority to sell it if he could receive favorable terms for it. If there is reason for leasing it and no further need for the Government to use it and the Secretary of the Navy can sell the dry dock, why not give him authority to do so?

Mr. BUTLER. That time may come, but it has not come yet.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That time may come at some time in the future, but I hope not. The Secretary of the Navy has asked that he have authority to lease it. He has not asked that he have authority to sell it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I presume the gentleman is acquainted with conditions there and I will ask him whether there is any use of this dry dock by the Government?

Mr. BUTLER. None whatever.

Mr. O'CONNOR. None whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then why not vest in the Secretary of the Navy the authority to sell it?

Mr. BUTLER. All the naval activities of the Government at this point have been suspended, and we have received a little money by leasing this dry dock from time to time. I do not believe it is advisable to sell it, because there is no point near there where a small Government vessel may be docked for repairs if necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, after hearing the explanation of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority be, and is hereby, given to the Secretary of the Navy, when in his discretion it will be for the public good, to lease for periods not exceeding five years, and revocable at any time, the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., and such lease shall be reported annually to Congress: Provided, That all money received from such lease shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. O'CONNOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL LEPER HOME.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12105) providing funds for the erection of additional suitable and necessary buildings for the National Leper Home.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to get a little information from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserved the right to object for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to ask his question.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I see you make provision for 300 additional beds to take care of that many additional lepers. I want to state to the gentleman that I have a letter from the State health officer in Texas stating that there are now 200 lepers in that State for whom they have no place, and asking me to support this bill. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks $650,000 is a sufficient sum to enlarge this leprosarium sufficiently to take care of the lepers who are in the United States, when the Secretary of the Treasury in his report says there are probably now twelve hundred lepers in the United States outside of this leprosarium?

Mr. ELLIOTT. All I know about this matter is what has been brought to my attention by the Secretary of the Navy and the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service. I understand from their report that there are now in the neighborhood of 1,200 lepers in the United States.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is what the Secretary stated.

Mr. ELLIOTT. And the leprosarium has a capacity of 200 beds at this time. It is necessary to have it enlarged so that they can provide for 300 additional beds to take care of people who ought to be in that institution.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Would the gentleman favor increasing the appropriation to $1,000,000, so that we can take care of these unfortunate people who are a menace to the country?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The Secretary of the Treasury has asked for only $650,000 at this time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That would take care of about one-third of the number of lepers that the Secretary of the Treasury says are now in the United States outside of this leprosarium.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am for the bill. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is going to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman reserved the right to object I had already objected, but I withheld the objection in order to be courteous to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I wanted to get this information before the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the National Government provided an appropriation of $250,000 for the accommodation of 200 lepers at this leprosarium, which was opened for the reception of patients in March, 1921. There are 100 additional applications on file. The bill provides for an additional 300 beds. If, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH], it is going to be the policy of the National Government to take over all of the health activities of the Government, and that no health activities shall be prosecuted by the States, that the States, including those in the South, are to abandon their ancient doctrine of State rights in looking after the health and security and protection of their own, this appropriation will mount to not only $1,000,000 but to many millions, and we will have the care of all tubercular patients and every other invalid by the National Government.

The finances of the Government are not in such a flourishing condition that we can launch upon this policy at the present time. We had better go a little slowly and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

CREDIT FOR MILITARY SERVICE IN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House Joint Resolution 180, extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry, be, and the same are hereby, extended to apply to those citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War, upon their resumption of citizenship in the United States, provided the service with the allied armies shall be similar to the service with the Army of the United States for which recognition is granted in the act and resolution herein referred to.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "war," insert the words "and who were honorably discharged."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

SURVEY OF THE POTOMAC RIVER TO GREAT FALLS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 192) providing for the survey of the Potomac River banks and adjacent lands from Washington, D. C., to Great Falls, with a view to possible extension of the District park system.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman reserve the right to object?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman is going to object, I do not think we ought to take the time to discuss the joint resolution. I am fully in harmony with the gentleman's view of the matter. I think this ought to be done, but why discuss it when objection is going to be made?

Mr. DYER. Is there objection to its going over without prejudice?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was going to ask the gentleman if he would not let it go over.

Mr. DYER. I ask unanimous consent that it go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11492) providing for the transfer or sale of Army and Navy equipment to the Boy Scouts of America.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as they may prescribe, to transfer without reimbursement or sell by negotiation to the Boy Scouts of America, as chartered by Congress, such articles of equipment and supplies no longer needed in the military or naval service as may be helpful to scouts and scout officials in conducting their camps and in carrying out the program of the Boy Scouts of America.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "to" strike out the words "transfer without reimbursement or."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

RENTS, ROYALTIES, AND BONUSES OF NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11363) granting a portion of the rents, royalties, and bonuses received from lands within naval petroleum reserves to the States within the boundaries of which said reserves are located.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I am inclined to object unless I can get some information to change my present attitude. I recognize that we do grant to the State a certain per cent of receipts from various reserves or public lands to the State for schools and road purposes, but here we are attempting to grant a certain portion of the rents and royalties derived from the naval petroleum reserves. These reserves are different in character from the general public property of the United States. They are in some instances being operated for the Government, and the Government is receiving a return in the way of rentals. Why should we pay any percentage of the rentals that are coming to the Government for its own benefit if used by the Navy from the oil coming from these reserves?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a good many years ago we established a policy of giving to the State a portion of the rents, royalties, or income received from any public land held permanently in public ownership. The basis of the policy is the right of the State to secure a return from the land within its borders held permanently in public ownership in order to compensate it for its loss by reason of not being able to tax the land.

Years ago we provided that 25 per cent of the receipts of the forest reserves should go to the State in lieu of taxes, it being estimated that that was about the portion of the receipts that would compensate the State for the loss of the right and opportunity to tax. When we passed the national leasing act we provided that as to rents and royalties that had accrued prior to the passage of the act the State should have 20 per cent, and of all future rents and royalties it should have 37½ per cent to compensate the State for loss of the opportunity to collect revenue through taxation. The only lands now held in public ownership for development from which the States receive no income are the naval oil reserves. As to these reserves the States are required to spend money for roads, schools, and other purposes in connection with their development. All the arguments that apply to the other lands certainly apply to the naval reserves. In fact, there is a stronger reason why the State is entitled to returns from these lands. In the case of the other lands they are reserved for general purposes and for the interest of all the people. In this case the lands are reserved as a source of revenue for the Navy. There is no reason why the State should forego its right to tax lands because the income from them is held for the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Assuming in the case of these naval oil reserves being operated by the Navy for their own purposes, would the gentleman still contend that the Government should pay the State a percentage of the value?

Mr. MONDELL. I have tried to make that plain. I think there is a stronger equity in this case than if the land was withheld from taxation for the general public good. In that case it might be argued that the advancement of the general public good compensated the State for its loss. In this case it is held in the interest of one activity of the Government. In other words no State in the Union ought to be compelled to have part of its area held untaxed for the benefit of the Army or the Navy, and be compelled to furnish schools and build roads across these lands without having some compensation. The fact is the States where the reserves are located are building schools and building roads on and across these reservations at great cost.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not follow the logic of the gentleman in view of the fact that when we erect public buildings and other public institutions we do not compensate the State for the loss of taxes that would be collected if it was owned by a private party.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a matter of a few square feet or part of a block or at the most a small area. Here are large areas. In the case of one reserve, a public road is now being built at the expense of the community—several miles in length at a cost of several thousand dollars a mile, and eventually it will cost $20,000 a mile or more. Schoolhouses are being built. The State has to pay all the cost for the maintenance of the Government in and about these lands as in all other cases. As a matter of fact when we passed the oil leasing bill there was an impression that these areas were included in the provisions of the oil leasing bill, but the comptroller held a short time ago they were not. The language was not clear. Instead of giving to the States what they would receive from similar lands held under the leasing act they are receiving only 20 per cent of the royalty instead of 37½ per cent.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman state how many States this applies to?

Mr. MONDELL. California and Wyoming.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Has the gentleman any information as to the amount of money that would be received for royalties under this provision?

Mr. MONDELL. One can not accurately tell; it would be in proportion about the same as other lands held under the leasing act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Can the gentleman give any idea of the amount of money involved in this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, eventually it might amount to many thousands of dollars.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. How much?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know; no one knows.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does not the gentleman think we ought to have this information before we consider such a bill as this by unanimous consent?

Mr. MONDELL. Let me say to the gentleman that nobody can tell how much the returns from the taxes of a certain tract would be. If these lands were in private ownership, and if they were rich in oil, they would bring a large return; if the returns were considerable, there would be considerable population and the outlay would be large because of the need of roads and schools and courts and police, and so forth.

We do not, of course, know just what the receipts will be, but we have said in the case of forest reserves that 25 per cent was a fair return for the State. We have said as to lands similar to these under the leasing act that 37½ per cent is not too much. The Interior Department and the Navy Department have both agreed that 20 per cent would certainly not be too much to grant in these cases.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me we ought to have some estimate of the amount of money involved.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, there is no way under heaven by which you could tell how much taxation a State would receive from a certain tract or how much the royalty might be from a certain tract, but of this we are sure, that if the tract is rich there is much activity and a large number of people, and there the cost of government is great. If it is not, the cost of government and of maintenance of roads and schools is small, as is the income. So it is a matter that adjusts itself to the conditions. I trust the gentleman will not object, as this is a matter of considerable importance. My State is now spending a large sum of money in building roads and schools in the vicinity of one of these reserves, and the State of California is doing the same.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is entirely right in saying that a considerable percentage of the receipts of the national forests are paid to the State within which the lands are located. It is also true that there are few, if any, of the national forests that are self-sustaining. Altogether millions of dollars are spent by the Federal Government on the national forests over and above all receipts.

And when the percentage of the gross receipts of the forest are paid, as they are, to the States, running, in some instances, as high as 45 per cent of the receipts of the forests, it means, the whole proposition being a losing proposition, that, so far as the Government is concerned, the Government is making an appropriation of money out of the Treasury to be paid to the States for the privilege of using the Government's own property within those States. And until we know something more about what is going to be realized out of these leases and royalties, until there is more time for consideration of this proposition than will be available under the unanimous-consent arrangement, I shall object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? The gentleman is talking about the forest reserves. It is not a question of forest reserves.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman has referred to the forest reserves and has justified his bill on the basis that the Federal Government has always permitted a percentage of the income from forest reserves to go to the States.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. But the gentleman refers to the fact that in some cases the forest reserves do not bring to the Government enough to care for the reserves. That is true. But here is a case where there must be a return to the Federal Government, and a large return, or the State gets nothing, for the Government gets 80 per cent of the income. The State gets but 20 per cent of it. So that the situation the gentleman complains of on the forest reserves does not and can not prevail here at all. The situation is very different. Here is a case where the income of the Government must be considerable or the State gets nothing.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. We are not advised of what the expense of operation is going to be; we are not permitted to know whether or not this thing will resolve itself into the same situation as the forests, which are a losing proposition, and we are paying a large percentage of the receipts out of a losing proposition, which, as I say, is virtually an appropriation from the Federal Government to the States for the privilege of the United States to use its own property.

Mr. MONDELL. But if the gentleman will allow me, his argument, whether it has force or not, as applied to the forests, does not apply to this situation. It can not apply to this situation, because there must be an income here, or there can be no payment to the State. Right now the States are being required and compelled to make large outlays with no compensation. It is not fair. It would not be fair in the gentleman's own State and it is not fair in the States where this condition exists. If we could tax these lands, as we would were they in private ownership and being developed, we should, of course, get our revenues in that way.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman says that of course there are going to be large receipts, and I ask him how much or how large, and he gives no information whatever; is not able to make a suggestion. And we are asked to consider this whole thing by unanimous consent. So I am constrained to object, Mr. Speaker.

FOREST LANDS IN WENATCHEE FOREST, WASH.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6750, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6750 and disagree to the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6750. An act for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. HAYDEN.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS OF ST. LOUIS AND SALT LAKE CITY.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate Joint Resolution 208, authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROSSDALE. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman in charge of the bill tell the House something about it? It looks to me like a very big proposition—$4,800,000 to be passed without due consideration.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that this legislation is made necessary by reason of the act of Congress by which it placed a limitation on the amount that could be spent by the several Federal reserve banks on building projects. The committee gave very careful consideration to this bill, and I will state for the benefit of the Members here that the St. Louis bank is the only one of the 12 banks that has not already contracted for or completed a building. The reason they have not completed their building is due to the fact that they had some leases on certain lands and the holders of the leases were attempting to hold them up by extortionate charges; and therefore when Congress put on this limitation of $250,000 the St. Louis bank was not under the line, so that they had to come to Congress for this relief. They are asking in the bill that was passed by the Senate—and I might say to the gentleman that the Senate has already passed this bill—that they put a limitation of 30 per cent on the capital and surplus of the bank that can be spent for a building.

Mr. ROSSDALE. What is the capital surplus?

Mr. McFADDEN. The capital and surplus of the St. Louis bank on August 30, 1922, was $14,173,000. The Senate provided for a limitation for building of 30 per cent of the capital and surplus. The House committee has amended that and made it 25 per cent.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Does the gentleman think it is a good thing for a bank with $13,000,000 of surplus and capital stock to spend $5,000,000 for a monument for the people of St. Louis?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think the gentleman has the right interpretation of this. It is a practical building in contemplation and not a monument, but is to be used for the exclusive service of the bank's requirements.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How much did the Federal reserve bank in New York get?

Mr. ROSSDALE. That is also a monument and a shameful expense. They bought a big, square block in New York, and tore down some big, fine buildings to secure the space to build this worthless monument. I do not believe half the space is necessary. New York City did not especially want it. They are spending about $26,000,000 on that building and a building at a cost of six or eight million dollars would be ample.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that all the space that we have provided for in this building is absolutely necessary, and now they are in rented buildings and at a great disadvantage. They are scattered in three or four places in the city. The matter has been gone into very carefully, and this space is needed, all of it, which the money will provide.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the size of the lot that has been purchased by the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman in detail, but it goes from one block to another.

Mr. STAFFORD. An entire square?

Mr. McFADDEN. Not an entire square. It is rather an L shape.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice it is proposed to expend $3,500,000.

Mr. McFADDEN. Not to exceed $3,500,000. It is expected to cost less.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report says it has been estimated that it will cost $3,500,000.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am told that it will not cost quite $3,500,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whose money is it that goes to the erection of this building?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is money that belongs to the Federal reserve banking system.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it money that goes to the Federal Government under the Federal reserve act?

Mr. McFADDEN. After the bank has earned a certain profit a stated amount is returned to the United States as a franchise tax. The Government is not entitled to any of the earnings of the system till the earnings are declared "net" earnings—and the law provides that a portion of these net earnings shall be taxed in the form of a franchise tax—and in this manner the Government gets a portion of the net earnings of the system.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Will it ever show a profit if they can go out and embark on a big scheme of building monuments throughout the country?

Mr. McFADDEN. My understanding is that this is not an excessive amount that is contemplated here for the requirements of the bank at St. Louis. By comparison with Kansas City and New York City, it is a much more moderate plant.

Mr. ROSSDALE. I think that any bank or corporation with $13,000,000 paid-in capital stock and surplus that will go out and spend $5,000,000 for a building is embarking on a dangerous scheme. Of course, none of us questions the safety of the Federal reserve bank, but if it were some other kind of bank does the gentleman think we would permit its officers and stockholders to spend $5,000,000 of that $13,000,000 for a great, big office building?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will state to the gentleman that they are now doing business in St. Louis in five different buildings. The subtreasury there has been discontinued, and they are running considerable of a hazard in doing business in the way they are situated now. There is not a building there available for next year in which to house the institution, so that the bank is going to be at the mercy of the landlords on their present leases unless this building is authorized, and, besides that, they own this land or site that has already been acquired and paid for.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Does the gentleman think that $1,300,000 for land in the city of St. Louis is a good business proposition? Does not the gentleman think that they could have gotten cheaper land?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that I am not familiar with the land values in St. Louis, but I am familiar with this site, having been recently in St. Louis. It is on a prominent business street in St. Louis, and I should say it is worth what has been paid for it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is it not true that this bank has paid over $1,000,000 for the lot, and that now the lot is not a source of income, but is subject to taxes and outgo until this building is erected?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is correct—something more than a million dollars.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And this bill does not require the expenditure of any particular sum, but is simply permissive that they can expend not to exceed 25 per cent of the capital and surplus, and they are not required to spend that sum, but can spend a less sum if they can construct a building for a less sum?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. I am in favor of the gentleman's bill and I think it is meritorious, but I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that a resolution was referred to the gentleman's committee, Senate Joint Resolution 23, authorizing a building to be erected at Denver at a cost of 5 per cent of the capital and surplus. It seems to me that that is such a modest request that I am surprised the gentleman's committee has not acted upon it.

Mr. McFADDEN. There is a great pressure not only from Denver but from Detroit, and Jacksonville, Fla., and perhaps one other place—Little Rock, Ark.—for a branch bank building; but the committee thought we had better not take up the consideration of bills for branch banks at this time. But in St. Louis the committee felt that we should go ahead and give them authority to erect this building. The lease on the rented buildings expires this year, and the Government has vacated an alley, and they have an understanding with the city council there that they must do a certain amount of work before a certain time—next May, I believe it is—or else a new contract will have to be made. The St. Louis Federal reserve directors do not think they should enter into any dickering with the city council as to this alleyway.

I will say to gentlemen of the committee that in regard to these authorizations of branch bank buildings, the committee proposes at an early date to bring in a bill for all of them, and ask for authority covering those branches. I am sure, as far as I can speak for the committee, I know of no objection to the inclusion of Denver for the requirements in their branch.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill evidently repeals in part a former act passed by Congress. The former act, permitting these buildings, excepted from the provisions of it those buildings that were not under contract. It is expressly stated in this that it is not under contract, so that it is a new authorization. I should like to know something more about it before I sit here and acquiesce in unanimous consent to the passage of this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ROSSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I am unalterably opposed to any further extension of the plan of erecting any additional monumental Federal reserve bank buildings, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman just now for that purpose. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LAS VEGAS, N. MEX.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3163) to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SECTION 135 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3618) to amend section 135 of the Judicial Code.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 135 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"If an appeal or writ of error has been or shall be taken to, or issued out of, any circuit court of appeals in a case wherein such appeal or writ of error should have been taken to or issued out of the Supreme Court; or if an appeal or writ of error has been or shall be taken to, or issued out of, the Supreme Court in a case wherein such appeal or writ of error should have been taken to, or issued out of, a circuit court of appeals, such appeal or writ of error shall not for such reason be dismissed, but shall be transferred to the proper court, which shall thereupon be possessed of the same and shall proceed to the determination thereof, with the same force and effect as if such appeal or writ of error had been duly taken to, or issued out of, the court to which it is so transferred."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "adding," strike out the words "at the end thereof the following paragraph," and insert in lieu thereof the words "thereto a new section to be known as section 238(a)."

Page 1, line 6, at the beginning of the line insert "Sec. 238(a)."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the title of the bill was amended to read "An act to amend the Judicial Code, in reference to appeals and writs of error."

On motion of Mr. DYER a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SECTION 51 OF CHAPTER 4 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 12356) as amended, to amend section 51 of chapter 4 of the Judicial Code, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 51 of chapter 4 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 51. Except as provided in the five succeeding sections, no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a district court; and, except as provided in the six succeeding sections, no civil suit shall be brought in any district court against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different States, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant: Provided, however, That any civil suit, action, or proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States, or by or on behalf of any officer of the United States authorized by law to sue, may be brought in any district whereof the defendant is an inhabitant, or where there be more than one defendant in any district whereof any one of the defendants is an inhabitant, or in any district wherein the defendant, or any one of the defendants, may sojourn; or in any district wherein the cause of action or any part thereof arose; and in any such suit, action, or proceeding, process, summons, or subpœna against any defendant issued from the district court of the district wherein such suit is brought shall run in any other district and service thereof upon any defendant may be made in any district within the United States, or the territorial or insular possessions thereof in which any such defendant may be found, with the same force and effect as if the same had been served within the district in which said suit, action, or proceeding is brought."

SEC. 2. That section 876 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 876. Subpœnas for witnesses who are required to attend a court of the United States in any district may run into any other district: Provided, That in civil cases no writ of subpœna shall issue for witnesses living out of the district in which the court is held at a greater distance than one hundred miles from the place of holding the same without the permission of the trial court being first had upon proper application and cause shown."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand a second.

Mr. WINGO. I demand a second.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, this bill combines two different bills—H. R. 12356 and H. R. 12355—both of which were sent to me by the Attorney General, with the request that I introduce them, because, it was claimed, they were necessary for the purpose of aiding in carrying on the suits that are being instituted with reference to war frauds.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Does the gentleman refer to this bill and the one which we have just passed?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; two bills have been combined and embodied in this bill.

Mr. WINGO. There is no printed copy of any bill that embodies all that the gentleman has moved to suspend the rules and pass, is there?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; all of it with the exception of just one slight change. It combines H. R. 12356 and H. R. 12355. Both have been reported and both are embodied in this, so that both may be passed at once.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield for a question.

Mr. GARNER. I will ask the gentleman if he has conferred with any of the Democratic membership on the Judiciary Committee as to the advisability of the passage of this legislation?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It was considered by the committee, and there was no objection on the part of anyone, and I have conferred with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] at various times, and also with other Members in reference to it, and so far as I know there is no objection to the bill in its present form.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the gentleman to say he has conferred with my colleague [Mr. SUMNERS], and that Mr. SUMNERS favors the legislation that he proposes to suspend the rules and pass?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has combined in his bill, as I gather from the reading of it, the provisions of two bills that have been reported by the committee?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, one is to grant the right to a judge to allow a subpœna to run to a person who lives more than 100 miles from the situs of the trial?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Outside of the district.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think in civil actions that such great power should be granted to the trial judge to summon a man perhaps 2,000 miles or 3,000 miles to testify in a civil proceedings? This is not limited only to those actions which are brought by the Government, which are the basis of the demand for this legislation on the part of the Attorney General, but it extends to all cases.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is not an arbitrary power. It is a power granted subject to the direction of the court, and there are cases where a witness ought to appear in court in person. I can not conceive of a court granting an order of this kind unless there is some good reason for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a great power to vest in a judge, to compel a witness in a civil case to be brought across the country and held in a city, where the same purpose could be accomplished by deposition.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Fees will have to be paid. Very often, as the gentleman is aware, in the trial of a lawsuit it is of great importance to have a person in court to contradict or explain anything that may be sprung at the trial. Often it is not possible to anticipate in taking testimony by deposition what testimony may be wanted.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is a large power to vest in a trial judge. That might cause great inconvenience to the witness.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman knows how unsatisfactory it is to take the deposition of a witness without knowing anything about what the witnesses on the other side may testify to on the trial. There are cases where I think the trial judge ought to have the power to order the subpœnaing of a witness so he may be present personally in court.

Mr. STAFFORD. The trial judge may not be acquainted with the inconvenience that might be caused by compelling the witness to come 3,000 miles, which he might do in an extreme case.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It has got to be on a showing before the court, and those are matters that the court can take into consideration.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. In addition to the change in the running of subpœnas, you also change the venue in certain actions do you not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, as I understand from some statements that have been made, in the Government war-fraud cases you want to bring suit in the city of Washington instead of going to Philadelphia, New York, San Francisco, Nashville, Memphis, and so forth?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We may want to bring suit in this city.

Mr. WINGO. That is what it means, does it not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It may mean that. In reference to matters that have taken place at a distance, it may be easier for the Government to try the case where it occurred, but it is true that what is wanted is the power to sue and bring people across State and District lines. Under the present law if you bring a civil suit in the District of Columbia you can not bring in anyone who lives beyond the District, and in equity suits it very often defeats the suit itself if you are unable to bring all of the parties into court.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman explain to the House how it is that it is proposed to change this long-established rule for the benefit of the Government, when you will not give the same right to a private citizen?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I leave that for some other gentleman to explain.

Mr. WINGO. What reason was given for that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There was no special reason given. They are asking for it in war-fraud cases.

Mr. WINGO. Why should the Government in a civil action be given a privilege that the humblest citizen would not have in a civil action in a Federal court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think they ought to have it in these war-fraud cases.

Mr. WINGO. That has been the rule, has it not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It has been the rule that you could not bring a person across a district line in a civil action.

Mr. GARNER. If you indicted a man for an offense, where the jurisdiction was in Texas, under your bill could you bring him here?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, no; this has nothing to do with criminal cases. It applies only to civil cases.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But under the second section of the bill as presented by the gentleman, if the United States had a claim of $1,000 against a man on the Pacific coast, it could make him come clear across the country to the District of Columbia to defend a $1,000 suit, could it not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They might if they could find the man here.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If they could find any one of several men here. They might bring a suit against half a dozen men jointly, and if they could catch any one of them in the District of Columbia temporarily, they could sue them all here. The bill says:

Provided, however, That any civil suit, action, or proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States, or by or on behalf of any officer of the United States authorized by law to sue, may be brought in any district whereof the defendant is an inhabitant, or where there be more than one defendant in any district whereof any one of the defendants is an inhabitant, or in any district wherein the defendant or any one of the defendants may be found.

Now, if the United States Government had a claim against six men in California, for instance, and one was found temporarily here, they could make all six come here. If one was sojourning here, they could bring all here to defend a thousand-dollar claim.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. You could not sue them under the present arrangement, perhaps, because they claim they are inhabitants of some other district.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The United States Government can go into any Federal district where they live. This is not confined to war-fraud cases. This is a general statute.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; it is a general statute, as far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Your bill says, "in any civil suit, action, or proceeding by or on behalf of the United States, or by or on behalf of any officer of the United States authorized by law," and so forth.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Unless you have such a provision a great many of the defendants in war-fraud cases will escape.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Why is it necessary to say in any civil suit or action? Why not limit it to war-fraud cases?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Brought by the Government.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Or on behalf of an officer.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; an officer of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Why is it necessary; why can not the Government go into the district?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If you sue them in one district, unless you can get others across the district line, your suit may fail.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; you may sue any man in the district where he resides under the present law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Let the gentleman read the Attorney General's report.

Mr. JONES of Texas. You can sue any man that is liable and show that the other is out of the jurisdiction, and you can recover against him.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. You can sue one individual, but if it is an equity suit in which there is an accounting you may not be able to proceed at all. Many of these suits no doubt will be suits where an accounting is required and where all the parties must be in court.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Why do you not limit it to suits involving war-fraud cases?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, it is difficult to determine just exactly what is "a war-fraud case."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman mean to say that under the present rule if two men were liable on a claim brought by the United States Government and one lived in one district and one in another that you could not sue them under the present law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. You can sue in different districts separately, but you can not sue in one district and get judgment against the two, and if it is an equity suit you may not be able to get judgment against either of them.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman think that a man who has some liability to the Government should be dragged across the continent because the Government chooses to join him to some other man in some little claim?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think there will be any trouble about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill and I think we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will withhold it for a moment.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Minnesota withdraw his motion to give me an opportunity to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman from Wyoming tell the House what his program is as far as he can for the future? I have had a number of Members come to me to-day asking what was the purpose of the gentleman from Wyoming and the organization for next week. I think it would be an accommodation to gentlemen if he would give us all the information he can touching the program for the next 10 days.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have already discussed this matter somewhat with the gentleman from Texas. My opinion is that when the House meets on Tuesday it is altogether possible that there will not be a quorum present. The Senate may have by that time passed the coal commission bill, the fact-finding bill. It has occurred to me that there would probably be no difficulty in sending that bill to conference without raising the question of a quorum. If at that time there is nothing before the House other than such a measure as that, it has occurred to me that the House might see fit to recess, if it was agreeable all around, until Friday; though if at that time it seemed probable that the Senate was likely to promptly pass the coal distribution bill, or there were other conditions which rendered such action inadvisable, the House would adjourn over only until the following day. We have stated to Members on this side that we shall not insist upon a quorum being here Tuesday, but that they will be called if a quorum is necessary for any purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Assuming that there will be no Senate business on Tuesday that requires consideration, does not the gentleman believe that it would be very expedient to consider the Private Calendar? I find that on that calendar there are 79 bills undisposed of. A great many of these bills are not only very meritorious but a great many of them are urgent. I, myself, have no particular personal interest in the matter. My name is attached to but one bill, and that is comparatively unimportant. It has seemed to me for a long time that Congress is rather slow in passing on small claims against the Government which ought to be handled as promptly as possible.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I assume that in any event the House will be in session on Friday, which is Private Calendar day, and so far as the "gentleman from Wyoming" is concerned, he certainly would have no objection to taking up the Private Calendar at that time if that should be the disposition of the House. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that we have given more attention to bills on the Private Calendar in this Congress than in almost any Congress for a good many years, and we have passed a considerable number of bills that have not received consideration in the Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Even granting that this Congress has been reasonably speedy in dealing with the Private Calendar, that constitutes no reason why we should not take up private bills not yet acted on if we have ample time in which to do it.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say this: That it is always difficult to take the Private Calendar up without a quorum. There is almost certain to be some one who will object. But I assume we will probably have a quorum next Friday.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But to-day we have been taking up bills by unanimous consent, a good many of them, and some of them are not dissimilar to the kind of bills that appear on the Private Calendar, and I believe a great many of those 80 bills could be considered without objection or without a quorum call if it can be understood that the Private Calendar is to be considered Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday. The trouble about Friday is that by that day business from the Senate may be such as to displace everything else.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not anticipate that there will be any business from the Senate by Friday to take up any considerable time of the House unless the Senate shall very radically amend our coal distribution bill.

Mr. GARNER. As I understand the program of the gentleman, so far as we can definitely understand it, that outside of the possibilities of a quorum not being here the possibilities are that you will continue to adjourn until Friday?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; unless something arises in the meantime that would seem to necessitate an earlier meeting, in which event the gentleman from Texas will be notified in time.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. FULLER. May we not have an understanding now that Tuesday next may be substituted for Friday, so that private pension bills can be taken up that day?

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if we can get such an agreement; on Friday those bills are in order, anyway.

Mr. FULLER. The question is whether we will be in session then.

Mr. MONDELL. We will be in session on Friday, undoubtedly.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I am informed that the pension bills were in order to-day; those that were on the Private Calendar.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that by unanimous consent this day was set aside for the Unanimous Consent Calendar and suspensions. Of course, anyone could be recognized to suspend the rules, but the unanimous-consent agreement was that the day should be devoted to unanimous consent and suspension business.

Mr. MONDELL. May I say this in regard to pension bills: The Senate has not, as I recall, passed a single omnibus pension bill in this Congress. We have now before the Senate—I do not know how many——

Mr. FULLER. Eight.

Mr. MONDELL. Eight, the gentleman says. While I shall certainly not object to having the pension bills passed on Friday, I presume that there are gentlemen who would object to our taking up pension bills on Tuesday, inasmuch as we will be in session on Friday.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will suggest to the gentleman that when the Senate gets ready to pass those bills, it does it in but a few moments.

Mr. MONDELL. And without consideration?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The chairman of the Senate committee is now trying to get all the House bills through, but this coal control act took the place of them this afternoon, and the corrupt practices act will be taken up to-morrow. He hopes to get it up in two or three days. If we could pass to-day the omnibus bill, that contains a lot of distressing cases, he might pass it along with the others. If it could be done now, it could go in with the other bills.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope I can have my request for adjournment passed upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS OF ST. LOUIS AND SALT LAKE CITY.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up again Senate Joint Resolution 208. This is very important, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to call up Senate Joint Resolution 208, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 208, authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

RENTS FROM LANDS WITHIN NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 11363) granting a portion of the rents, royalties, and bonuses received from lands within naval petroleum reserves to the States within the boundaries of which said reserves are located, which was objected to, may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 11363 be allowed to retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say just a word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if there is to be objection, I will not press it, and will withdraw my request.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2885) to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I withhold the point.

MARTHA H. SAERS—LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. DYER, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Martha H. Saers (H. R. 10318), Sixty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. FENN, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BIXLER, indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. BRENNAN (at the request of Mr. MICHENER), indefinitely, on account of investigating coal situation.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order previously agreed to, adjourned until Tuesday, September 5, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CHINDBLOM: Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 12368. A bill to abolish the inspection districts of Apalachicola, Fla., and Burlington, Vt., and the office of one supervising inspector, Steamboat Inspection Service; without amendment (Rept. No. 1201). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. S. 1771. An act to authorize the United States, through the United States Shipping Board, to acquire a site on Hazzell Island, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, for a fuel and fuel-oil station and fresh-water reservoir for Shipping Board and other merchant vessels, as well as United States naval vessels, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 1202). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FULLER: Committee on Invalid Pensions. H. R. 12545. A bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; without amendments (Rept. No. 1203). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12514) granting a pension to Robert Garrett, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. UPSHAW: A bill (H. R. 12542) to establish State engineering experiment stations in the States and Territories in connection with institutions of higher technical education for the promotion of engineering and industrial research as a measure of industrial, commercial, military, and naval progress and preparedness in times of peace or war; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 12543) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. VAILE: A bill (H. R. 12544) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue oil and gas permits and leases to persons equitably entitled thereto, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 12545) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; to the Committee of the Whole House.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 12546) granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Murdock; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12547) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Buckley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12548) for the relief of Axel Jacobson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 12549) granting an increase of pension to Nathan P. Jackson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 12550) for the relief of Oscar F. Lackey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 12551) granting an increase of pension to Ida May Pierson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Miss ROBERTSON: A bill (H. R. 12552) granting a pension to Edith Bonter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHREVE: A bill (H. R. 12553) granting a pension to Jane Platner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: A bill (H. R. 12554) granting a pension to Louis Weiss; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6261. By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Petition of Colonel Edward Kittilsen Camp, No. 27, favoring the passage of House bill 9198; to the Committee on Pensions.

6262. Also, petition of Local Union No. 364, Brewery Workers, Rock Island, Ill., relating to the Government of Russia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6263. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Mr. Christian F. Megerle, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the 40 per cent tariff on wire cloth; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6264. Also, petition of J. A. Colgan, representative of the New York State legislative board, of Brooklyn, N. Y., requesting repeal of Title III of the transportation act of 1920; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

6265. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Papers to accompany House bill 12451, granting an increase of pension to Robert M. Maginniss; to the Committee on Pensions.

6266. By Mr. VARE: Petition of Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, opposed to taking over of public utilities and enterprises by the Government; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, September 2, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we rejoice before Thee this morning that whatever may be the uncertainties of these days of anxiety, Thou art the One who can blaze the pathway before our feet. Thou canst indicate by Thy wisdom where we fail, and what we ought to do. We do ask, therefore, that Thou wouldst come to each of us and to all those in whose hands are the interests of our beloved land with Thine own direction and enable us to know that the Heavens do rule, and that Thou art God, and shall be our Guide even unto the end. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

THE RAILROAD SITUATION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD in 8-point type a very able and timely article on the railroad situation by Hon. S. H. Cowan, of Fort Worth, Tex.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type, as follows:

WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY THEY FIRST MAKE MAD.

To-day's papers quote Senators and others at Washington as predicting Government ownership and operation of railways unless the existing strike is settled. The statements are the more weighty because made by men thoroughly familiar with railroad legislation, regulation, and operation, and the labor and coal situation to railroads and coal, and their intertwining relationship to every industry and to the country as a whole.

As a condition to the surrender of Government operation during the war, railroad investors, bankers, the railroads themselves and their allies in and out of Congress procured the establishment of a percentage profit guaranty as a rate-making rule for the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce to make rates on a cost-plus basis of 5½ per cent (now 5¾) and a method of valuation on which to estimate it, regardless of the real earning power of any railroad or the roads as a whole upon reasonable rates.

All opposition was swept off its feet and spurred into permitting the enactment by the demand for return of the railroads. Senators and Congressmen who knew it was wrong voted for it.

The commission undertook to apply the rule as a revenue producer with enormous increase of rates. While they have been reduced an average of 10 per cent from the high point, they are out of all reason and destroying the progressive development of the country which must continue unless operating expenses are very greatly reduced.

Generally speaking, the people believe that operating expenses could be greatly reduced by greater efficiency on the part of employees and by reducing the number of employees if that increased efficiency shall be obtained, reductions of high salaries and high wages, and by more economical methods of operation.

Proof of this apart from individual opinion or even public opinion has not been accumulated nor is there any system of actual observation or supervision by any public agency over expenditures sufficient to form the basis of the opinion. The opinion exists however.

On the other hand, the railroads declare they are using a maximum of effort to reduce operating expenses by every available method, and have continuously and tenaciously urged the Labor Board to reduce wages as far as possible.

It must be plain to everyone that the wage question not only enters into that item that is paid by the railroads to their own employees but in the production and manufacture of everything that the railroads use—fuel, equipment, steel, ties, and every item of maintenance and construction.

The strike of coal miners, said to be 600,000 men; the strike of shopmen on the railroads, said to be 400,000; and here and there additional strikes against reduction in wages and the certainty that further reductions of wages for other employees would likely result in a strike, coupled with the improbability of being able by any method to very much reduce the cost of fuel, equipment, supplies, materials, and maintenance, presents a condition against which there is no legal remedy that can reach the point of certainly reducing operating expenses. The most that can be done would be greater economy and operation. Operating expenses as related to rates must be applied to the unit of traffic, and since some 45 per cent or more of the aggregate of operating expenses of the railroads consists of items which are not materially affected by the volume of traffic, but are constant whether the traffic moves or not, it is evident that the greater the volume of traffic the less these expenses are per unit; that is, per ton-mile or passenger-mile.

A vast movement of traffic formerly going by railroad now goes by truck and automobile, and a great volume that did move under the lower rates that would permit it does not move at all. That is the necessary tendency of high rates, and will increase as expenses enables people to transport otherwise than by railroad more advantageously, and with the continued building of hard-surface roads.

Whether the reductions in wages which have been made by the Labor Board after having heard most extensively both sides on the question and what they had to say, has reached substantially a standard under the present cost of living, there seems to be no way to determine. It is not seriously contended by the roads that much greater reductions should be made, but on the other hand the employees insist that too much reduction has been made in certain lines, and they are probably a unit against any further reduction in any department. Nor is it at all probable that they will be made.

Upon the valuation which the Interstate Commerce Commission placed upon the roads for purposes of the application of the rate-making rule as a standard for the aggregate of earnings and the rates which produce the same, there is no expectation that such aggregate net income can, under existing expenditures, be much above 3 per cent as an aggregate, although if we selected out the big systems of railroads making great volume of traffic they earn really more than 5 per cent on the average value per mile obtained by dividing aggregate mileage into the aggregate value. Yet the other roads are earning less than nothing and in some instances not enough to pay operating expenses, for example, like the Orient Railroad.

It follows inevitably that rates can not be made upon any such valuation of the railroads because it must so reduce the volume of traffic as to destroy the earning power while it cripples the industry of the country, and besides having once lost the traffic to the trailer and the truck they can never get it back and flowing directly from this situation the percentage of earnings possible to make if you take the railroads as an aggregate would be such as to forbid additional construction, with rare exceptions growing out of peculiar circumstances and the development of transportation in the unoccupied and unserved portions of the United States will have ceased. This does not apply to the big systems generally although it does apply to some. But rates are not made based upon what the big systems can do and the shipper has no right to rates based upon that under existing law, but the rates must be determined on what can be earned on the aggregate of all net returns.

This net return is after paying all expenses, including taxes. Hence, it is an attempt to make rates under a cost-plus basis of a guaranteed percentage of return.

It has been demonstrated to be an impossibility, and it deprives the public of a reasonable basis of rates. The principle necessarily leads to unreasonableness.

It is plain, therefore, that under this law and the attempt to enforce it all of the calamity and all of the burden of extraordinary expenses of operation are shifted to the shoulders of the public. Not to all of the public alike but it doubles up on the producer of agricultural products and live stock and other farm products, because all of these things must go to a central market for a standard price, and the price at home deducts the cost of transportation if sold there, and it is deducted out of the account sales if sold at the central market. In turn all of the manufactured articles are sold f. o. b. factory, and the farmer and the stock raiser pay the factory price plus the high freight rates on whatever is shipped to them.

Yet the same invincible combination of railroad bankers and bankers controlling railroad investments and their followers and allies who secured the enactment of this iniquitous law is sufficiently powerful up to this date to command the administration now in power and the Congress now in session to forestall and prevent a modification or repeal of this iniquitous guaranty provision of this act so as to afford again to the shipper the opportunity for reasonable rates upon the railroad that he patronizes judged from the standpoint of his interest as well as the carrier.

All of the benefit of the multitude of laws passed by the States and the Nation in the last 40 years to regulate railroads to the end of securing reasonable rates for the shippers and to protect them against exorbitant exactions is destroyed by this provision of the act, and so they are really unregulated in those particulars.

Supposing themselves to be protected in the opportunity to shift to the shoulders of the public, there has been the most unparalleled and enormous increase in operating expenses in every direction. So it has come to pass that they can not make the money because the traffic does not move in sufficient volume, and they can not reduce the expenses, according to their contention, and it is the case of "Daniel come to judgment."

It is no wonder, however, that the leaders in thought on this great transportation problem are brought to the point against their will, where they can see no other solution than Government ownership and operation of the railroads.

The impelling reasons for it will remain just the same after the strike is settled as before. It is a condition in the evolution of the times and of the whole situation of industry as related to labor and price as related to the cost of production and transportation, and the result of having reached that point where the individual ownership of public service corporations renders it impossible for them to secure the returns which they demand and pay the wages which they are required to pay and furnish the public with the service that it ought to have.

With the thought I have given this subject heretofore for a long number of years, and with some intimate knowledge of these things, I have long seen the coming necessity, and men who have thought on the subject have entertained the same idea, and that is Government ownership and operation of the roads.

I visited Judge Prouty frequently during his illness that resulted in his death. He was probably the ablest man in this country or elsewhere with respect to every detail of the great railroad transportation problem and the operation and financing and the public relations of the railroads. His mind was perfectly clear during his illness, and he often discussed these matters, and he said to me there was no other solution of the railroad problem of this country except to nationalize the railroads.

I do not submit this article to you because of ever having advocated or now advocating the Government ownership of railroads, but I submit it for the purpose of pointing to the fact that unless the railroads and their banking interests and allies shall concede the repeal of the guaranty clause of the transportation act and will abandon the inflated valuation that has been placed upon their property, seeing it is impossible for them to earn enough money to make them worth what they are valued at, and unless they will return to reasonable rates as they were before the war, and demonstrate that they can, with the vast increase in volume of traffic that will flow, again successfully operate their property, Government ownership will be inevitable, and that will have been the direct result of their own policies, coupled with the industrial and labor conditions in this country as they exist whatever might have been the cause.

There are many of the best thinkers in the Senate and in the House of Representatives who believe, and so expressed themselves, that if at the close of the war the railroads had been returned to their owners and the rates restored as they were before there was no obstacle to their successful operation as transportation companies and they would abandon making of themselves speculative financial institutions.

Restoration of pre-war rates would have stimulated industry everywhere, with no unemployment; return to more nearly normal cost of living would have justified and, in fact, would have been followed by reduction of wages, and the wage earner profited more by his ability to save, compared to continued profiteering prices and high rents that beset him. The farmer and stock raiser would not have been compelled to pay out everything he makes for expenses, while the railroads and the public-service corporations would have not made so much until readjustment could be made all along the line on a live-and-let-live basis. They should have been willing, after enjoying the guaranteed returns during the war, to share with the whole people in the return to normal prices, and laid thereby the foundation for return to wages that they could afford to pay in the end and that the wage earners could afford to take with high cost of living abolished.

It is quite certain that capital and labor will have to share with the producer of the primary wealth from the soil in a restoration of live-and-let-live basis, without a guaranty or standard that the industries of the country as a whole can not pay. Friendly cooperation on a live-and-let-live basis lies at the foundation of the safety of government itself. If it can not be otherwise brought about, can Government ownership be avoided? This is the paramount present burning inquiry staring us all in the face. Capital must look at it; labor must look at it; the producer of bread and meat is looking at it.

These necessities of unusual cooperation were not considered when the transportation act was passed, and the people have to meet the problem and face it as it is to-day. Whatever may have been the objections to Government ownership—and they are legion—it is by no means certain that it is possible to avoid it if we are to have adequate transportation, and it is practically certain it can not be avoided unless the returns on the investment, taken in the aggregate, are reduced to such a small percentage that none but the Government can afford to take it.

It is a pretty safe prediction that the railroads themselves will be the ones who in the near future will be the strongest advocates of Government ownership.

Verily, it is correct to say, when casting the minds' eye back over the history of the demands and standards that they have been able to get written into the law to attempt to force upon the public, "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."

S. H. COWAN.

STREET RAILWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, when the bill (S. 985) to amend the provisions of an act relating to certain railway corporations owning or operating street railways in the District of Columbia, approved June 5, 1900, was reached on the calendar yesterday my attention was engaged with something else and I thought it was a different bill that was being considered. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. If the bill has already gone to the House I desire to have a request made that the House return it to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the bill is still in the possession of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then I suppose all I need to do is to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, which I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harreld	Nicholson	Sterling
Bursum	Heflin	Oddie	Townsend
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Trammell
Capper	Kellogg	Pomerene	Underwood
Cummins	Kendrick	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Keyes	Rawson	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	McCumber	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Edge	McNary	Sheppard	Willis
Ernst	Nelson	Simmons
Gooding	New	Smith

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absent Members.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Lenroot	Myers	Shortridge	Smoot
McLean

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Broussard	Culberson	King	Warren

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT OVER LABOR DAY.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it adjourn until 12 o'clock on Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ROSA E. PLUMMER.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2794) for the relief of Rosa E. Plummer, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 902) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GOODING:

A bill (S. 3978) to amend section 4 of the act to regulate commerce, passed February 4, 1887, and subsequent amendments thereof; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3979) to extend the market news service of the Department of Agriculture by telegraph to the State of Washington; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3980) to provide for the reimbursement for money expended in the construction of hangars for the use of the Air Mail Service of the Post Office Department; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. REED of Missouri:

A bill (S. 3981) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to branch banks under the national bank act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REGULATION OF ELECTION EXPENDITURES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate, in pursuance of the unanimous-consent agreement, Senate bill 3603.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3603) to regulate expenditures in connection with the nomination and election of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the term "political committee" under the provisions of this act shall include the national committees of all political parties and the national congressional campaign committees of all parties and all committees, associations, or organizations which shall in two or more States influence the result or attempt to influence the result of an election at which United States Senators or Representatives in Congress are to be elected.

SEC. 2. That every political committee as defined in this act shall have a chairman and a treasurer. It shall be the duty of the treasurer to keep a detailed and exact account of all money or its equivalent received by or promised to such committee or any member thereof, or by or to any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and the name of every person, firm, association, or committee from whom received, made by the committee or any member thereof, or by any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and to whom paid, distributed, or disbursed. No officer or member of such committee, or other person acting under its authority or in its behalf, shall receive any money or its equivalent, or expend or promise to expend any money on behalf of such committee, until after a chairman and treasurer of such committee shall have been chosen.

SEC. 3. That every payment or disbursement made by a political committee exceeding $10 in amount be evidenced by a receipted bill stating the particulars of expense, and every such record, voucher, receipt, or account shall be preserved for 15 months after the election to which it relates.

SEC. 4. That whoever, acting under the authority or in behalf of such political committee, whether as a member thereof, or otherwise, receives any contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise of money or its equivalent, shall, on demand, and in an event within five days after the receipt of such contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise, render to the treasurer of such political committee a detailed account of the same, together with the name and address from whom received, and said treasurer shall forthwith enter the same in a ledger or record to be kept by him for that purpose.

SEC. 5. That the treasurer of every such political committee shall, not more than 15 days and not less than 10 days next before an election at which United States Senators or Representatives in Congress are to be elected in two or more States, file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate in the case of a committee to promote the election of Senators or in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives in the case of a committee to promote the election of Representatives in Congress, at Washington, D. C., with said Secretary or Clerk, an itemized detailed statement; and on each sixth day thereafter until such election said treasurer shall file with said Secretary or Clerk a supplemental itemized detailed statement. Each of said statements shall conform to the requirements of the following section of this act, except that the supplemental statement herein required need not contain any item of which publicity is given in a previous statement. Each of said statements shall be full and complete and shall be signed and sworn to by said treasurer.

It shall also be the duty of said treasurer to file a similar statement with said Secretary or Clerk within 30 days after such election, such final statement also to be signed and sworn to by said treasurer and to conform to the requirements of the following section of this act. The statements so filed with the Secretary of the Senate or Clerk of the House shall be preserved by him for 15 months and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

SEC. 6. That the statements required by the preceding section of this act shall state:

First. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee who or which has contributed, promised, loaned, or advanced to such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, either in one or more items, money or its equivalent of the aggregate amount or value of $100 or more, and the amount or sum contributed, promised, loaned, or advanced by each.

Second. The aggregate sum contributed, promised, loaned, or advanced to such political committee, or to any officer, member, or agent thereof, in amounts of less than $100.

Third. The total sum of all contributions, promises, loans, and advances received by such political committee or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

Fourth. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee to whom such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, has distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised any sum of money or its equivalent of the amount or value of $10 or more, stating the amount or sum distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised to each, and the purpose thereof.

Fifth. The aggregate sum distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised by such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, where the amount or value of such distribution, disbursement, loan, advance, or promise to any one person, firm, association, or committee in one or more items is less than $10.

Sixth. The total sum disbursed, distributed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised by such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

SEC. 7. That every person, firm, association, or committee, except political committees as hereinbefore defined, that shall expend or promise any sum of money or other thing of value amounting to $50 or more for the purpose of influencing or controlling, in two or more States, the result of an election at which Representatives to the Congress of the United States are elected, unless he or it shall contribute the same to a political committee as hereinbefore defined, shall file the statements of the same under oath, as required by section 5 of this act, in the office of the Secretary of the Senate or Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, at Washington, D. C., which statements shall be held by said Clerk in all respects as required by section 6 of this act.

SEC. 8. That any person may in connection with such election incur and pay from his own private funds for the purpose of influencing or controlling, in two or more States, the results of an election at which United States Senators or Representatives to the Congress of the United States are elected, all necessary personal expenses for his traveling, for stationery, and postage, and for telegraph and telephone service without being subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That when used in this act—

The term "election" means any general or special election at which a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives of the United States is elected.

SEC. 10. That every candidate for election to the House of Representatives shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding the election, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part, and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his election.

SEC. 11. That every candidate for election to the Senate shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding the election, file with the Secretary of the Senate at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his election.

SEC. 12. That every candidate shall, within 15 days after the election, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives or with the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, up to, on, and after the day of such election, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his election.

Every such candidate shall include therein a statement of every promise or pledge made by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, or to whom he has given authority to make any such promise or pledge, before the completion of any such election, relative to the appointment or recommendation for appointment of any person to any position of trust, honor, or profit, either in the county, State, or Nation, or in any political subdivision thereof, or in any private or corporate employment, for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy; and if any such promise or pledge shall have been made, the name or names, the address or addresses, and the occupation or occupations of the person or persons to whom such promise or pledge shall have been made shall be stated, together with a description of the position relating to which such promise or pledge has been made. In the event that no such promise or pledge has been made by such candidate that fact shall be distinctly stated.

SEC. 13. That no candidate shall promise any office or position to any person or to use his influence or to give his support to any person for any office or position for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person, in his candidacy.

SEC. 14. That no candidate shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise, or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, in procuring his election, any sum in the aggregate in excess of the amount which he may lawfully give, contribute, expend, or promise under the laws of the State in which he resides: Provided, That no candidate shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $5,000 in any campaign for his election to the House of Representatives, and no candidate shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $10,000 in any campaign for his election to the Senate: Provided further, That money expended by any candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he resides, or for his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for travel and subsistence, stationery and postage, writing or printing (other than in newspapers), and distributing letters, circulars, and posters, and for telegraph and telephone service, shall not be regarded as an expenditure within the meaning of this title, and shall not be considered any part of the sum herein fixed as the limit of expense and need not be shown in the statements required to be filed under the provisions of this title.

SEC. 15. That every statement required under the provisions of this act shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person making such statement, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths, and the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered, within the time required, shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 16. That this act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the selection, nomination, or election of candidates for election to the Senate or House of Representatives, or to the election of Senators or Members of the House of Representatives, or to exempt any person from complying with such State laws.

SEC. 17. That nothing contained in this act shall limit or affect the right of any person to spend money for proper legal expenses in maintaining or contesting the results of any election.

SEC. 18. That every person willfully violating any provision of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 19. That if any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 20. That this act may be cited as the corrupt practices act, 1922.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have on one or two occasions discussed briefly the necessity for this legislation. Perhaps there may be some Senators present who did not hear my statement in that behalf, and for that reason I beg the indulgence of the Senate just for a very few minutes.

The Senate will remember that the Supreme Court held the provisions of the corrupt practices act relating to the nomination and election of Senators and Congressmen unconstitutional in so far as it attempted to regulate the expenditures in primary or convention campaigns. The question of its validity so far as it related to the general election of Senators or Congressmen was not involved in that litigation or in any other litigation, so far as I am advised.

After that law was held unconstitutional I presented the bill now before the Senate, and as I presented it the provisions of the bill were the same as in the corrupt practices act, except that I subdivided it into titles, having one title apply to general elections, the other title applying to primary nominations or conventions nominating Senators or Congressmen. My reason for that was that I felt, and I feel now, that if this matter should come before the court again there might be a reversal of the opinion of the Supreme Court; and I am constrained to say that in view of the fact that while the decision was 5 to 4 holding the provisions in so far as they related to primaries unconstitutional, Mr. Justice McKenna said that he concurred in the opinion as it applied to the statute under consideration, which was enacted prior to the seventeenth amendment, but he reserved the question of the power of Congress under that amendment. Senators will see the pertinency of this statement by Mr. Justice McKenna when we keep in mind the fact that the corrupt practices act was passed, I think, in 1911 and prior to the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution which requires Senators to be elected by popular vote.

If there were more time, I should ask the Senate to vote upon the bill as I presented it, regulating both primaries and general elections; but I realize, as all Senators must realize, that a serious question is involved when it comes to the regulation of the primaries or conventions, and the time is now all but past when any law regulating primaries would have any effect during this year. That being so, the committee decided, and I think wisely, to eliminate all provisions in this bill in so far as they relate to the nomination or selection of candidates for Senate or Congress, and the bill which the committee is now asking the Senate to pass applies only to the general election of Senators or Congressmen; and in that behalf the provisions of the pending amendment are exactly what they were under the old law in so far as it related to general elections.

There is another special reason for the passage of this special legislation at the present time.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Do I understand the Senator to say that this bill is precisely the same as the existing law except that it is applied to elections by the people?

Mr. POMERENE. That is it exactly; and I had begun to state another reason why we should have this legislation at this time.

It will be remembered that the old legislation was passed at a time when the only method of election of Senators was by the legislatures of the several States. The present Attorney General—perhaps in March or early in April—gave it as his opinion that the present corrupt practices act would have no application whatsoever to the election of Senators by popular vote, because at the time it was enacted we knew only of elections of Senators by legislatures. I express no opinion as to whether or not the Attorney General was right, but I think lawyers will agree with the Attorney General that it at least raised a very serious question, and we ought not to adjourn without having passed some legislation which would avoid that question.

Again, I have no doubt that the Attorney General's opinion was the result of considerable investigation; otherwise he would not have given it. Whether he is right or not, if any question should arise as to the violation of the criminal provisions of the corrupt practices act, we could hardly expect the Attorney General, entertaining the views that he does entertain, to take up the prosecution.

Without referring to any particular case at all, I think Senators must all agree that we ought to have some Federal legislation upon this subject. If we were to adjourn without passing this bill, so far as the Federal Government is concerned there would be no effective statute upon the statute books regulating the amount of expenditures. Of course, Senators know that in many of the States there is pretty drastic legislation upon this subject. So far as the limitations of expenditures are concerned, the present law applies only to those States where there is no State legislation, or perhaps, to express myself more accurately, the Federal law does not conflict, and is not intended to conflict, with the legislation of any State where there is legislation.

I think that is about all I care to say so far as the provisions of the bill are concerned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. While I am a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I have been absent from the city, and was not present when the pending bill was considered and reported. I would like to ask the Senator, for information, his view as to the efficacy of the existing law to deal with elections in contradistinction with primaries. The Senator, as I understood him, broadly stated that under the present law there is no Federal provision which would limit the expenditures in an election by a candidate for the United States Senate. My understanding was that the existing law, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, is applicable to elections but not to primaries.

Mr. POMERENE. I think perhaps the Senator was not in the Chamber when I covered the very question which he evidently has in mind. Some time ago, perhaps the latter part of March or early in April, the Attorney General announced it as his opinion that as the corrupt practices act was passed prior to the amendment to the Constitution requiring Senators to be elected by popular vote, it could apply only to the election of Senators by State legislatures, and therefore, in his judgment, we have no regulation on the subject, even so far as it applies to the general election of Senators.

Mr. KING. Then this bill is to meet the criticism or suggestion of the Attorney General?

Mr. POMERENE. That is an accurate statement of the situation.

Mr. KING. If I might be permitted to respectfully dissent from the view of the Attorney General, I should do so; but perhaps it may be wise to enact some legislation.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator must agree with me, however, in this thought, that that being the opinion of the head of the Department of Justice, it could hardly be expected that he would begin criminal proceedings under a law which he thought was not applicable to the present state of affairs.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator resumes his seat, I want to call his attention to one provision in the bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. KING. I yield for a question.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but was not a member of the subcommittee which had this matter in charge, and because of other business did not attend the meeting of the full committee when the bill was reported.

I am wondering whether the Senator from Ohio regards the limitation of $10,000 on the expenditures as altogether fair in all States. In the State represented by our present Presiding Officer [Mr. ODDIE in the chair] there is a population of probably 100,000. In New York the population runs well up toward 11,000,000. The bill would permit precisely the same expenditure—$10,000—in each State. Is that altogether a fair proposition?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the very question which the Senator from Indiana has put to me was considered in the committee, and I agree with him that when it comes to the general law of the land, perhaps there ought to be some discrimination as to the amount to be expended, depending upon the population. But as the law has been on the statute books for 10 years or more, we felt that if we should suggest any amendment of that kind it would lead to a vast deal of discussion and might possibly delay final action by the present Congress.

May I say to the Senator from Indiana that when it comes to the limitation of expenditures based upon population, he will find, if he confers with other Senators, a good deal of difference of opinion as to the rule which should be adopted as to the amount of expenditure.

Again, if the Senator will permit me to suggest, I have not the figures before me, but my belief is that in the majority of the States there is a limitation on expenditures, and under the provisions of the pending bill, as under the provisions of the old law, the limitations provided herein apply only in States where there are no limitations fixed by State law. In other words, wherever there are State limitations, they must prevail, irrespective of the limitation fixed in the pending bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understand that. Of course, the Senator is entirely right in that statement. I was merely calling attention to what I thought was unfair in this provision. I might add that this limitation of $10,000 was fixed when the legislatures elected Senators. Now a candidate may go about all over the State, if he chooses so to do, and go before the people of an entire State. If $10,000 was the limit when Senators were elected by the legislatures, there certainly ought to be some recognition of the additional expenditure required since a candidate must go out among the people, which it is entirely proper for him to do.

I want to ask the Senator, however, does he say that he understands this legislation to be temporary, simply to cover the approaching campaign and election?

Mr. POMERENE. That was our thought exactly. The Senators who were present when this bill was voted out seemed to be unanimously of the opinion that this whole subject should be taken up, and that we should have some act passed in the immediate future which would regulate both primaries and elections, if the Senate is of the opinion that we have that constitutional power. The chairman of the committee, on motion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], has appointed a subcommittee of five, and that subcommittee of five is instructed to present to the full committee, not later than January 1, a bill covering this entire subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is there anything in the pending measure which would prevent an individual from expending any sum he desired to expend, independent of the action of any political committee, to secure the election of a candidate for the Senate, or of a candidate for the House of Representatives?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not believe I caught the import of the Senator's question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is there anything in the bill which would prevent the expenditure of an unlimited sum by an individual to secure the election of a candidate for the Senate or a candidate for the House of Representatives, if that individual chose, on his own initiative, to expend money independent of the action of any political committee?

Mr. POMERENE. This limitation applies to the candidate for the Senate or for the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that. The publicity requirement is upon the political committee and upon the candidate.

Mr. POMERENE. No; the limitation——

Mr. ROBINSON. The requirement as to publicity is upon the political committee, and the limitation as to expenditure is upon the candidate. Is there anything in the bill which limits the amount an individual may, on his own initiative, spend to secure the election of a candidate for the Senate or the House of Representatives, and, to go a little further than that, is there anything in the bill requiring an individual to account for his expenditures?

Mr. KING. An individual who is not a candidate?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. Suppose the Senator from Ohio were a candidate for election in Ohio, as he is, and some individual should desire to expend a quarter of a million dollars to secure his election, a thing which, of course, is unthinkable in connection with the candidacy of the Senator from Ohio. Is there anything in this bill which would require that individual to account, and is there anything in this bill which would prevent that individual from expending an unlimited sum in such a case?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think I can fully inform the Senator in that regard. There is nothing in the bill which puts any limit whatever on what one individual may spend for the election of one Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was my understanding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Nor is the individual required to make any accounting whatever of his expenditures. A political committee is required to give publicity to its actions, but it is not limited in the amount which it may expend. A political committee is defined in the bill as follows:

> The term "political committee" under the provisions of this act shall include the national committees of all political parties and the national congressional campaign committees of all political parties, and all committees, associations, or organizations which shall in two or more States influence the result or attempt to influence the result of an election at which United States Senators or Representatives in Congress are to be elected.

So that even an association or an organization in a State for promoting the candidacy of one Senator in that State, or of two Senators in that State, is not under the ban of the bill in any way.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Montana has construed the proposed measure just exactly as my casual reading of it would lead me to construe it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have nothing further to say, and I yield the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not desire to make a speech. I wanted to get information. With the permission of the Senator from Ohio, I will point out now that this statute can be very easily evaded. It is not going to accomplish very much. I am not attaching censure to the Senator from Ohio, or even to the committee which reported the bill. Admittedly an individual or an association desiring to encompass the election or the defeat of a candidate for the Senate, or of a candidate for the House of Representatives, can expend, without accounting for it, any sum that individual or association may be prompted to expend.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will bear in mind that this is not to be construed at all as an approbation upon the part of the committee of practices of that character. Nor, if the committee were framing a bill which met their views with respect to the matter, would they for a moment tolerate that kind of thing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Nothing I have said can be construed into a criticism of the committee. I stated in the beginning that I did not censure either the Senator from Ohio, who introduced the bill, or the committee. I understand perfectly well that the committee, in order to secure any legislation at all regulating the coming election, has been prompted to report this measure, which is substantially in conformity to the existing law, except that it is made applicable to elections by popular vote, whereas the old law was determined by the Attorney General to be applicable only to elections as they were held at the time the law was passed, namely, by the legislatures, so far as Senators are concerned.

I am not criticizing the committee nor the author of the bill, because unquestionably a complete and effective statute upon the subject can not be enacted to become effective between the present day and the time of the November elections under the conditions which surround legislation here. But I am pointing out the fact that if anyone chooses to do so he can evade the provisions and effect of the legislation without the slightest difficulty. If any corporation or individual or association is sufficiently interested in the election or the defeat of a candidate for the Senate or of a candidate of the House of Representatives to take that course, that corporation, that association, or that individual can expend an unreasonable sum to accomplish the purpose without being required to account for a dollar of it and without being held amenable to the Federal law for any criminal act. In that view of the matter I shall support the bill without any very great degree of enthusiasm.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think the Senator is quite right in his criticism of the bill. My understanding is that the bill with its imperfections is being presented now purely as a temporary proposition to meet the present campaign and the approaching election. I will say that in my State provision has been made for that, where a man can not spend money as an individual except as he shall do it through a committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. I very much regret that the committee has not found it consistent to report a bill dealing with the entire subject, a bill that could be regarded properly as permanent legislation. The regulation of campaign expenditures has been before the Congress and the country for a long time. It is not necessary to review the history of it or the circumstances which have made necessary additional legislation on the part of Congress. I realize that the subject is associated with many difficulties, and I am only expressing regret that the bill presented leaves it possible for unlimited sums to be expended by individuals, either to elect or to defeat candidates for the Senate or candidates for the House of Representatives, with no limitations of amount, with no requirement as to accounting, and with no possibility of penalties to be imposed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield, of course, to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply want to say that I join in the Senator's regret that we have not been able to do that which he suggests.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to ask the Senator from Ohio another question. It is perfectly apparent that before this bill can be enacted the election will be approaching. Many activities are already in progress on the part of political committees and on the part of candidates looking toward that election. Sums are being contributed now both to candidates and to political committees. Will a contribution made prior to the approval of the act, either to the candidate himself or to a political committee, be accounted under the terms of the pending bill, or, if no accounting is made, will any liability attach by reason of the failure to account? In other words, will the act be retroactive?

Mr. POMERENE. If it comes to a violation of the criminal law I would have my doubts about it. In other words, I do not think that a prosecution could be sustained. Assuming that the $10,000 had been expended prior to this time, I doubt whether the criminal statute would apply.

Mr. ROBINSON. Assuming that a political committee had collected $1,000,000, just to make the case a strong one, prior to the approval of the act and had expended that sum for its purposes prior to the approval of the act. In that event does the act require the committee to account that sum? Can the act require the committee to account that sum? Those are the two questions.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has asked a very pertinent question, but it has not troubled me very much so far as the pending legislation is concerned, because I think we can avoid, in part at least, the difficulties which the Senator suggests by the speedy passage of the bill. I have no doubt about this, however, that if the candidate had expended these exorbitant sums I am still of the opinion that the Senate, if it came to a contest, could deal with the subject in such way as its wisdom would suggest.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, my question was based upon the premise that the contribution should be received and the expenditure made before the bill is passed. As to the speedy passage of the bill, I join with the Senator from Ohio in expressing the hope that it will occur. I am not in a position, however, to give him any assurance that it will. The body at the other end of the Capitol has yet to consider the matter, and, according to the press notices, there is no very great indication that it is going to do that very hastily.

In any event there are two very great difficulties presented that the legislation can not or does not at least remedy. The first is that it does not seek to prevent unlimited contributions and expenditures by an individual acting independently of a political committee or of the candidate. The second is that before it can become effective, even if it is speedily passed, excessive contributions may have been made in anticipation of it and the expenditures also may have been had.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have some very definite views on the question now raised by the Senator, which I should be very glad to express briefly. The matter of the political committee is really not particularly applicable. That is rather academic because we have the present law in relation to political committees, the initial section of which reads as follows:

> That the term "political committee" under the provisions of this act shall include the national committees of all political parties and the national congressional campaign committees of all political parties, and all committees or associations or organizations which shall in two or more States influence the result or attempt to influence the result of an election at which Representatives in Congress are to be elected.

That is to be reenacted simply by adding to the phrase "Representatives in Congress" the words "or Senators," so it would read—> influence the result or attempt to influence the result of an election at which Representatives in Congress or Senators are to be elected.

That will remain the law until the new law takes effect. The statute applies to political parties who endeavor to control the election at which Representatives in Congress are elected, but at that same election Senators are also to be elected. So the statute would apply with all the force and vigor that the new law would have with respect to political committees.

Now, with respect to contributions by the candidate, of course, if the candidate has already contributed $10,000 or more than that sum he could not be punished under the pending bill because as to that it would be ex post facto. He could only be punished for what he does after the law goes into effect and, as the Senator said, he may in anticipation of the act contribute the money, and thus escape the penalty. The question is presented, however, as to the case of one who has already made some contribution and as to how much more he may be able to contribute without incurring the pains and penalties of the act. If he has contributed $9,000, the question is presented can he contribute $1,000 more, making $10,000 in all, or may he contribute $10,000 after the act is passed in addition to what he has already contributed?

Mr. ROBINSON. Even though he may have contributed $50,000 prior to the passage of the act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; even though he may have contributed $50,000 prior to that time. My judgment as to the matter is, in the case of the candidate who has contributed more than the $10,000, that he is shut out. He can not contribute anything more. If he contributed anything more, he would fall under the provisions of the act. In the case of the candidate who has already contributed $9,000, my judgment is that more than $1,000 would bring him under the same penalties of the act.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is in effect retroactive to that extent?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not regard it as retroactive at all. Of course, in a certain sense it might be so designated, but it looks to expenditures in the future. If, altogether, what he contributed in the past and what he contributes in the future amounts to more than $10,000, he may then be prosecuted, but he is not amenable to prosecution unless he contributes something in the future.

Mr. ROBINSON. The limitation is upon future amounts, according to the ordinary construction of statutes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Unless there is something in the statute which expressly makes its provisions applicable to past conduct it would not be construed as applying to things which have happened before it passed.

Mr. SMITH. Let me ask the Senator this question: Suppose one had spent $9,000 before the law became effective. After the law goes into operation, according to what the Senator said, he could spend but $1,000 more. What right would the law have to take cognizance of an act committed before ever the law went into effect?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the very question I am raising. But to make the case stronger, suppose the candidate, acting upon the judgment of the Attorney General that there is no law limiting his expenditure in his candidacy for the Senate, has expended $250,000 to promote his election before this law goes into effect. My question is whether it is retroactive so as to prevent him from expending any sum in the future?

My question is, Is the statute retroactive so as to prevent him from expending in the future any sum contributed in the past? Is it retroactive so as to penalize his expenditure in the past? The Senator from Montana has completely answered the last question. The point I am making is that if it is held retroactive at all its retroactive effect must arise from the language of the proposed act making it clear that the intention of the law is to relate its provisions to past acts or conduct; and if there is nothing in the act that does that all the candidate would have to do in order to entirely escape its provisions would be, the day before the President signed this act, to give his political committee all that he would give if it were not anticipated that the act would be passed.

These are difficulties, of course, that naturally arise, but they go to show that the act is not going to be very effective for the coming elections if there shall be candidates and if there shall be political committees who wish to avoid its effect.

Mr. EDGE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment reported by the committee to the pending bill. I send the amendment to the amendment to the desk and ask that the Secretary may read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment reported by the committee.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 20, section 14, line 13, after the word "printing," it is proposed to amend the amendment reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections by striking out the words "(other than in newspapers)."

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, very briefly I wish to draw the attention of the Senate to what I feel is a very distinct discrimination in the bill under consideration as reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I agree with everything the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has said as to the weaknesses of this measure; there is very much more criticism of it, it seems to me, which may be justified. However, I join with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] in holding that some law in reference to campaign expenditures should be on the statute books; at least we should be assured, the present law being under legal question, of a similar law to take its place, even with its weaknesses; but in passing such a measure it appeals to me that there can be no reasonable objection to perfecting it in some detail where it seems so apparent that it may be perfected.

In my judgment, no one can justify a provision imposing a maximum limitation on campaign expenditures of $10,000 by a candidate for the United States Senate and applying to all the States equally. One State may have a population of only 100,000, while another may have a population of 10,000,000, and of course it is impossible, in view of such comparisons, to justify a provision which limits to the same amount the expenditures for circularization and other necessary legitimate expenses in those two States.

However, I am not going to attempt to amend that section of the bill, because I realize that to make such an attempt would develop a long debate and would give rise to a discussion as to the proper rule to be followed, whether it should be based on population or otherwise, or on a classification of the States. Some of those questions have already been discussed in the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and I do not care to propose anything which would retard the passage of the proposed law.

My amendment, however, applies alone to section 14, which sets forth the exceptions covering the items for which candidates may spend money regardless of amount just so long as State laws do not prohibit such expenditures. The provisos in section 14 of the committee amendment read:

Provided, That no candidate shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $5,000 in any campaign for his election to the House of Representatives, and no candidate shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $10,000 in any campaign for his election to the Senate: Provided further, That money expended by any candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he resides, or for his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for travel and subsistence, stationery and postage, writing or printing (other than in newspapers), and distributing letters, circulars, and posters, and for telegraph and telephone service, shall not be regarded as an expenditure within the meaning of this title, and shall not be considered any part of the sum herein fixed as the limit of expense and need not be shown in the statements required to be filed under the provisions of this title.

In other words, a candidate for the Senate, say, in Nevada or New York, is entitled to spend $10,000 under the Federal statute, and can then spend $10,000,000, so far as that is concerned, if the State laws do not prohibit, for any of the purposes enumerated in the exceptions which I have just read. Personally, I think that the exceptions are very broad. Some one may ask, "Then why make it broader?" If we are purposing to embody in this bill the exceptions provided, then it appeals to me that it is only fair that the one great medium, it may be said, provided for public statements be not excluded from use. I refer to the newspapers and the magazines. A candidate would be permitted under this proposed law to send circular matter costing 1 cent or 2 cents for postage and incur the printing costs and the cost for addressing to 10,000,000 citizens of the State of New York or any other State in which the candidate may reside, the expenditure in the aggregate amounting to thousands and thousands of dollars; yet it is provided that a candidate may not insert in a newspaper in the State of New York or in some other State a modest announcement or any kind of an announcement which will inform the electorate as to the principles and the position of the candidate in the campaign.

Again it appeals to me, Mr. President, as being very dangerous and very unfair to make this exception. We well know that the editors and publishers of some leading newspapers become candidates for public office, in which event they have the advantage of using their editorial and news columns in presenting their own candidacy. In doing so the matter published is not in the form of an advertisement, but they publish whatever they please, either as editorials or as news. Any opponent or contestant is absolutely barred from obtaining the same publicity through the columns of the newspaper, because, under this proposed law he could not insert an announcement in a newspaper and pay for it in order that the public might be informed as to his position as contrasted with that of the person who might be favored by the newspapers. It need not be that the person so favored shall be the editor or publisher of the newspaper; he might be some friend of the proprietor or of the corporation owning the newspaper. It seems to me that it is indefensible when other exceptions are allowed not to extend a similar exception to legitimate newspaper advertising. Understand, I do not agree with the exception; I think the exceptions are entirely too broad; I think that they leave an opening through which a double-horse team may be driven through the bill at any time, so that the candidate may expend any amount of money he desires to expend if the State law does not prohibit it. But if we are going to allow exceptions, why discriminate in this matter and put a candidate in a position where he can not answer his opponent in the usual manner employed in circulating public statements before the electorate?

Many States, as we well know, have from 4,000,000 voters down; but as an illustration I will cite the case of a candidate who sends out 500,000 letters, each under a 2-cent stamp, the postage alone costing $10,000, with all the additional cost of printing, addressing, and so forth.

That candidate reaches in that manner 500,000 electors; he states his position as he pleases; but for very much less than the $15,000 or $20,000 which it would cost to reach the voters in that way he could secure many more times the publicity by utilizing a few newspapers. As we well know, some individual newspapers have a circulation of over 500,000 copies. It seems to me that brings up another thought, namely, that the provision as now drawn will encourage greater expenditure on the part of a candidate, because it will cost him more money to reach the electorate through circulars, post cards, and similar means than it will in the ordinary way by using the columns of a newspaper.

The only objection—and I will anticipate that—which I have heard raised to the exception of newspapers has been that in some cases perhaps—and it is a very broad assertion necessarily—the expenditure of money for advertising in newspapers might have undue influence upon the editorial policy of the newspaper or upon the opinion of the editor in discussing and taking a position in the political campaign. I really do not think, Mr. President, that such an argument need be seriously considered in the debate. Things have come to a very bad pass in this country if any considerable number of newspaper editors can be influenced by the ordinary political advertising that might be printed in the columns of their publications in a campaign. Perhaps some of them could be so influenced, for in every branch of society there are men who may be influenced, but as a real argument against the exception which my amendment proposes, I do not think that it has merit or much force.

Therefore, if we are going to make the other exceptions and permit candidates to print and distribute circulars and posters galore, then let us make the provision broad enough and fair enough so as to permit a candidate to reach the electorate in competition with an opponent who may be favored by the newspapers, and in that way enable him to conduct his campaign at a less cost, perhaps, than would be entailed under the provisions of the bill now pending.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I take it that we are shortly to have a vote on the pending measure. I hope so, and I do not want to delay action, for I am very much in favor of its enactment at the present time. I am greatly pleased to learn that the Committee on Privileges and Elections have appointed a subcommittee to prepare effective legislation on this whole subject.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has pointed out a few of the infirmities of the bill even after it is enacted into law. For myself, I believe it is a wise thing to have campaign money expended through a committee. Whatever is authorized to be expended should be expended by a responsible committee, and that committee should report all moneys received and from what sources and all moneys expended and for what purposes. Under present conditions any amount of money may be expended, any amount of newspaper space may be devoted to the defeat of a candidate if it is done by an individual or association or a corporation not connected directly with a campaign committee. That phase of the subject ought to be covered by law. It is proper in a republic to give the people information as to the issues and as to the qualifications of candidates. The candidates themselves are financially disproportionately equipped for doing this. The man of large means may advertise; he may send out under the statute in a perfectly legal manner as much information as he wishes, while the poor man necessarily must depend upon his friends who are interested in him and who feel that they want to do something for him properly and legally under the State and Federal laws.

That should be encouraged; but I have in my mind the thought that there should be a law of some kind whereby all of the candidates can receive equal publicity and all stand on an equality. That can be done through some arrangement with the press by State law.

I am in favor of a law limiting and regulating campaign expenses and I am ready to consider a bill to this end on its merits. I realize that it can not be done under this bill at this time. I am a candidate for the Senate. I propose to make a report, whether this bill is passed or not, in accordance with the existing law, regardless of the opinion of the Attorney General; but I want to see this bill passed so that there will be no question as to what the law is. I repeat that I am very much in favor of the action of the committee, which created a subcommittee to frame a law, which, I trust, will be considered at the earliest possible moment, and one that will be in harmony not only with honest elections but with the spirit of our free institutions.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I want to say only a word regarding this matter.

The amendment which has been proposed was also proposed when the committee had this bill under consideration, and at that time other proposed amendments were also discussed; but, as has been stated by the Senator from Ohio, it was considered by the committee that it was better not to encumber this measure with any of these proposed amendments, because of the fact that the importance of these amendments would not perhaps be clearly understood by the Senate in the limited time we would have for discussion.

The amendment that has been offered by the Senator has been offered with a very clear and a very fair statement. The one point, as it addresses itself to my mind, is this: This bill limits to $10,000 the amount that a Senator may expend in his election; but, as the Senator from New Jersey has stated, in making his return he is not bound to take into consideration the money that he has spent in travel, in postage, in letters and circulars, in telegrams, and in telephone service, and some other things; but if the Senator's amendment is adopted it will take away the restriction as to the amount of money that could be spent upon newspapers.

The effect of it, to my mind, would be this: A man of immense wealth running for the office of Senator would be enabled to spend all the money that he wishes, unlimited sums, in newspaper publications without having it deducted from the amount that he is authorized to expend under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. EDGE. If the amendment I have offered is not agreed to, is there any restriction of any kind whatever upon the expenditure of the wealthy man, as the Senator illustrates it, in circular matter, posters, letters, and so forth?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all. For the information of the Senate, I will say that a motion was adopted by the committee authorizing the chairman to appoint a subcommittee to draft a bill covering the subject of corrupt practices in elections, including primaries, and report to the full committee on the 1st of January next. Under the authorization contained in that motion, I have appointed the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] members of that subcommittee; and I think it is very safe for the Senate to leave all questions not embraced in the pending legislation to be considered by that committee, who will make this report early in the next session.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, the understanding by the committee, so I am told, when this bill was reported, was that it was temporary in character; and that is borne out by the statement made by the chairman that a subcommittee had been appointed for the purpose of formulating proposed legislation to be hereafter introduced. Because of that fact, I shall not support the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. Otherwise I should be tempted to support it, because I think newspaper advertising should be permitted, at least to some extent, as well as the sending of circulars throughout the State, and also, if I remember correctly, letters and postage.

Of course, it is an exceedingly difficult law to draw; but, inasmuch as it is hedged about by many difficulties which are not susceptible of hasty solution, I am quite content that this bill shall pass; and I shall not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey simply because this is a temporary matter to meet the existing situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDGE. I call for a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, I find, on page 21, line 7, the words "the selection, nomination, or." I think they should be stricken out, in view of the fact that at one stage of our consideration of this bill we made the limit apply to the "selection, nomination, or election," and that we did not intend those words to be stricken out in other sections.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes; they should be stricken out here.

Mr. POMERENE. I move, therefore, that on page 21, line 7, the words "selection, nomination, or" be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 21, line 7, in the proposed amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out the words "selection, nomination, or," so that it will read:

Not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the election of candidates for election to the Senate or House of Representatives.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, should not the words "for election," on line 8, be stricken out also?

Mr. POMERENE. I think so. On line 8, I move to strike out the words "for election."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "selection, nomination, or" on line 7, page 21.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "election to," so that it will read "candidates for the Senate or House of Representatives."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may the Secretary now read section 16 as amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the section as amended.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Section 16, as amended, reads as follows:

SEC. 16. That this act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the election of candidates for the Senate or House of Representatives or to the election of Senators or Members of the House of Representatives or to exempt any person from complying with such State laws.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That will not do. In order to perfect it, all of lines 7, 8, and 9, reading "the selection, nomination, or election of candidates for election to the Senate or House of Representatives, or to" should be stricken out.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that it will read:

That this act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the election of Senators or Members of the House of Representatives or to exempt any person from complying with such State laws.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. POMERENE. That will improve it very much.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suggest, then, that the action heretofore taken with respect to that be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The question is on reconsidering the action by which the amendments proposed in lines 7 and 8 were agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now I move to amend by striking out, from lines 7, 8, and 9, the following—the selection, nomination, or election of candidates for election to the Senate or House of Representatives, or to—

So that the section will read:

That this act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the election of Senators or Members of the House of Representatives, or to exempt any person from complying with such State laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' approved June 25, 1910, as amended by the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses,' approved August 19, 1911, and by the act approved August 23, 1912."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following Senate bills and joint resolution:

S. 2460. An act to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stats. 437), to certain lands in Utah;

S. 3659. An act to create the White House police force, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 156. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to erect and maintain a hotel upon the Fort Monroe Military Reservation in Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2199) to provide for the marking of anchorage grounds in waters of the United States, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following Senate bill and joint resolution, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 3618. An act to amend section 135 of the Judicial Code; and

S. J. Res. 23. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles Quarry within the limits of a United States military reservation in the Philippine Islands and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto, provided military necessities permit.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. HAYDEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9053. An act to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La.;

H. R. 9270. An act to confer upon the Territorial courts of Porto Rico concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts of that district of all offenses under the national prohibition act and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto;

H. R. 10144. An act conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public park purposes;

H. R. 11492. An act providing for the transfer or sale of Army and Navy equipment to the Boy Scouts of America;

H. R. 11901. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River to connect the city of Benwood, W. Va., and the city of Bellaire, Ohio; and

H. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry, to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War.

RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, while I know I can not have House bill 10766, the river and harbor bill, disposed of in its entirety this morning, there are a few amendments to which I think there will be no objection whatever, which I would like to have disposed of because several Senators who are interested want to go away soon. I understand the Senator in charge of the unfinished business does not care to call it up before 1 o'clock, so I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10766, authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with the understanding that only unobjected amendments will be considered.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether it is his intention to press the bill for consideration before the recess or adjournment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not my intention to press the bill for passage to-day. There are two amendments to which there is some objection which I do not expect to call up to-day.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator expect to have the bill passed, or to ask for its passage, before the adjournment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope to dispose of all the amendments except two and I want to present some to-day to which I think there will be no objection. Of course it will depend on the action of the Senate as to whether we pass the bill or not. We ought to pass it. The bill does not carry appropriations at all, and unless we pass it now estimates can not come down for the projects included in the bill. I think it is important that the bill should be passed soon.

Mr. KING. What amount of appropriations does the bill carry?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It merely approves and authorizes projects which have been carefully considered. It does not appropriate a dollar. The Senator will understand that under the rules under which we are proceeding it is necessary, in order that an appropriation may be made, that a project shall be authorized. The appropriation is made through a different committee—the Committee on Appropriations. I am not trying to have the bill passed to-day.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with the rule. I understood that there was a bill either incubating or which had been hatched by one of the committees carrying approximately $80,000,000 for rivers and harbors. This is not that bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no. This bill approves projects which, if we should appropriate for them all, would cost only some $37,000,000.

Mr. KING. How many new projects are provided for in the bills?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not remember the number of them, but, as I have said, they do not exceed about $37,000,000 in cost.

Mr. SMITH. I understand the Senator simply desires to have certain amendments incorporated in the bill, or action taken upon them, without attempting to-day to bring the bill to passage?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all I desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection, but I want to say in this connection that I think it very important to pass the bill as early as we can. We have not had a river and harbor bill for some time. As the Senator explained, the bill does not carry any appropriations, but it authorizes certain projects which have been reported favorably by the engineers and which have been before Congress for some time past.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let us take that question up a little later. I agree with the Senator absolutely.

Mr. FLETCHER. We must have this legislation before there can be any basis for an appropriation. I want to offer one or two amendments myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington to proceed with House bill 10766?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 22, between lines 3 and 4, insert the following paragraph:

Arkansas River, in the vicinity of Star Lake, Okla.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 22, line 6, I desire to have reconsidered the vote by which the amendment was agreed to with reference to a survey, and to amend it in accordance with the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, on page 22, lines 5 and 6, striking out the words "Sioux City, Iowa," and inserting the words "Chamberlain, S. Dak.," be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to strike out the word "Chamberlain" in the amendment and to insert the word "Pierre," so that the amendment will be to strike out "Sioux City, Iowa," and insert "Pierre, S. Dak."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit the following amendment providing for a survey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 9, as amended, in the Washington items of survey, the Senator from Washington moves to insert:

Cowlitz and Puyallup Rivers, Wash., with a view to preparing plans and estimates of cost for the prevention and control of floods on said rivers and their tributaries, and to determining the extent to which the United States and local interests should cooperate in carrying out any plans recommended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment concerning a project which was approved after the bill passed the House, and the bill was reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

Absecon Inlet, N. J., in accordance with a report submitted in House Document No. 375, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appreciate that any objection to river and harbor bills meets with but scant sympathy in this body or in the body at the other end of the Capitol. The Senator from Washington has stated that the new projects authorized will call for over $35,000,000. I have just hastily glanced at the bill, and I find that there are a very large number of projects authorized. The amendment just offered calls for an additional project.

In addition to those authorized, if I understand the bill, directing attention now to section 13, the Secretary of War is "directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made at the following-named localities," and a sufficient sum is appropriated for that purpose. Then follow several score of names of new projects.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Those are simply surveys. I want to say to the Senator that that is the usual provision in a bill of this kind. A project can not get any consideration at all unless it is surveyed. I venture to say that 50 per cent of those surveyed will be reported on adversely on the preliminary examination. That is the usual practice.

If the Senator looks into the matter carefully, I do not believe he will see any very serious objection to a proposition like that. Of course, we do not know any of the facts about these projects until they are reported upon, and I was in hopes that there would be no discussion with reference to the bill generally this morning. I did not call it up for that purpose. If the Senator has objection to any of these amendments, well and good; but he will have full opportunity hereafter to present any objection he may have to the bill in its general form or to any item in it. I did not want to take very much time this morning. I hope to dispose of the amendments to which I have called attention before 1 o'clock. That is all I wanted to do.

Mr. KING. Of course, I shall not engage in any discussion of the bill this morning. I only want to say that I shall object to any new projects of any kind, character, or description, and if I can defeat a bill containing these new projects in any proper and parliamentary way I shall do so. We have enough projects now pending, incomplete, to call for all the money the Treasury can properly give. I am in favor of completing all legitimate and proper projects, and I think we should complete them where the work of completion can be carried forward expeditiously before we order surveys of a hundred or a hundred and fifty new surveys.

I think this is a most absurd and most impolitic proposition. Take the Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers, where on many old projects we have expended large sums, projects which we have not completed, and much that has been expended has been wasted because the projects were not completed. In view of the drains upon the Treasury let us complete the worthy projects now under process of completion and not inaugurate work upon a hundred additional projects when we are not completing those upon which work has already been begun and upon which work has been authorized.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator object to this amendment?

Mr. KING. I object to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will withdraw that amendment at this time, because I do not desire to precipitate any discussion. But I have an amendment to propose, to which I am satisfied the Senator will not object. This is an amendment recommended by the engineers with reference to the continuation of the improvement in New York. Under the project as now adopted it will cost ultimately about $78,000,000 to complete it. Here is an amendment which reduces that $33,000,000.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will offer an amendment to withdraw the project entirely, I shall agree with him very cheerfully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 20, insert the following:

East River, N. Y., in accordance with the report submitted by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, Document No. 3, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is a modification of the existing project.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In connection with the amendment just agreed to I ask to have printed in the RECORD the following letter from the Secretary of War.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 12, 1922.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Supplementing my letter of May 31, 1922, in reply to your letter of May 24 asking certain questions in regard to the merits of the pending river and harbor bill (H. R. 10766) now before your committee, I desire to invite attention to the report submitted in River and Harbor Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, recommending a modification of the project for the improvement of East River.

The project heretofore adopted for this improvement provides, among other things, for a channel 40 feet in depth extending through East River from upper New York Bay to Throgs Neck. The part of this project which provides for a through channel 40 feet in depth was adopted by the river and harbor act of July 18, 1918, partly as a war measure with a view to providing a second deep channel into New York Harbor which could be utilized by the Navy in time of necessity. The estimated cost of the project at that time was $36,900,000, exclusive of amounts expended upon previous projects. Since 1918 additional surveys and investigations have been made, and experience in the conduct of the work indicates that due to the difficulties of the work and rise of prices the work will now cost approximately twice as much as was previously estimated. Consideration is given in the document above referred to (River and Harbor Committee Document No. 3, 67th Cong., 2d sess.) to the reduction in the project depth from 40 feet to 35 feet in the through channel east of the navy yard. Based on present prices, the cost of completing the through channel 40 feet in depth is estimated to be $71,500,000, while the cost of completing a channel 40 feet in depth up to the navy yard and 35 feet in depth east of the navy yard is $38,000,000, a difference of $33,500,000.

On account of the swift currents, rocky bottom, narrow and tortuous channel and congested traffic conditions, it is highly improbable that any vessel drawing as much as 35 feet would attempt to use the channel. Moreover, the channel is crossed by a number of bridges having a clearance of 135 feet above high water, which is insufficient for most, if not all, vessels drawing more than 35 feet to pass under without lowering their masts and funnels. The commercial statistics for the calendar year 1920 show that the deepest draft vessel entering New York Harbor drew between 35 and 36 feet, and that the deepest draft vessel leaving the harbor drew between 38 and 39 feet, and that out of 5,338 vessels entering and leaving the harbor only 8 drew 35 feet or more. At high tide, even with the 35-foot project depth, there would be over 40 feet of water through this channel, which would be sufficient for any vessel entering or leaving New York Harbor in the calendar year 1920, if other conditions were such as to make it possible for such vessel to pass through this channel.

The adoption of the 40-foot channel was favored by the Navy Department at the time it was adopted in 1918, but as shown by a letter published on page 5 of the River and Harbor Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, the Navy Department is now satisfied with a channel 40 feet in depth leading up to the navy yard and a 35-foot channel from there on through the East River.

The conditions, therefore, which tended to favor the adoption of the 40-foot channel in 1918 have materially changed, and in view of the great saving which will be effected by the modification of this project so as to provide for 35 feet east of the navy yard and the sufficiency of such project for all present or prospective commerce, I recommend that this project be modified accordingly. An item reading substantially as follows, inserted in section 2 of the pending bill, will accomplish this result:

East River, New York, in accordance with the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

Very sincerely,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all I will propose this morning, the hour of 1 o'clock having arrived. So I ask that the bill may be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Chair has not announced that the hour of 1 o'clock had arrived. I wanted to offer one or two amendments to the bill.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that immediately after the disposition of the pending coal emergency bill and of the coal commission bill, which is the unfinished business, I intend to move to take up the pension bills on the calendar.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate, the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I suggest that the unfinished business is House bill 12472, the coal bill which was considered yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill now before the Senate was temporarily laid aside yesterday in order to consider House bill 12472.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would like to know the present status, then, of House bill 12472.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understood upon yesterday that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily House bill 12377, which was then the unfinished business, and that the Senator from Iowa then asked unanimous consent to proceed with House bill 12472, the emergency coal bill. That being so, of course the commission bill, H. R. 12377, is still the unfinished business. I would suggest to the Senator from Iowa, in view of that fact, that he ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the emergency coal bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. In conformity with that suggestion, I ask unanimous consent that the bill just reported by the Assistant Secretary be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

Mr. CUMMINS. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12472.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I intend this afternoon to address myself to certain questions which were presented yesterday by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], these being the more important matters which are in controversy. But before I do so I desire to state in the briefest possible way what the bill is. In order that we may be prepared to vote upon the first question that must be disposed of, I move that the matter contained after the enacting clause in the bill now under consideration be stricken out, and that there be substituted therefor the matter contained in Senate bill 3940, together with the amendments to that bill which were reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, in the nature of a substitute, will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause in the bill H. R. 12472 and insert the matter which appears after the enacting clause in Senate bill 3940, as reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

That by reason of prolonged interruption in the operation of a substantial part of the coal mining industry in the United States and of impairment in the service of certain common carriers within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission and engaged in commerce among the States a national emergency exists which threatens to obstruct and hamper the operation of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, the transportation of the mails, the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign countries, and to furnish an opportunity for the disposition of coal and other fuel at unreasonably high prices.

SEC. 2. That the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, including the transportation act, 1920, and especially under section 402 of said transportation act, 1920, are, during the aforesaid emergency, enlarged to include the authority to issue in interstate transportation of coal or other fuel orders for priorities, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier, or region, or person, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for the priority in transportation and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of assisting in carrying into effect the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission made under existing law or under section 2 hereof there is hereby created and established an agency of the United States to be known as "the Federal fuel distribution," and there shall be appointed by the President a Federal fuel distributor, who shall ascertain:

(a) Whether there exists within the United States or any part thereof a shortage of coal or other fuel and the extent of such shortage;

(b) The fields of production of coal and other fuel and the principal markets to which such production is usually transported and distributed and the means and methods of distribution thereat;

(c) The prices normally and usually charged for such coal and other fuel and whether current prices, considering the costs of production and distribution, with fair profits, are just and reasonable; and

(d) The nature and location of the consumers, whether persons, firms, corporations, municipalities, or communities, which should receive priority in transportation and distribution under the acts to regulate commerce administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission, including the transportation act 1920 in time of shortage of coal or other fuel, or the transportation thereof, to the end that an equitable distribution of coal or other fuel may be secured so as best to meet the emergency and serve the public interest.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to receive and consider the recommendation of the Federal fuel distributor based upon his reports upon the foregoing subjects, and any other information which it may secure in any manner authorized by law.

SEC. 4. That the Federal fuel distributor may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the powers conferred upon him under the provisions of this act, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department agency or political subdivision thereof, or any person or persons, and may avail himself of the advice and assistance of any department, commission, or board of the Government, and may appoint or create any agent or agency to facilitate the power and authority hereby conferred; and he shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees not in conflict with existing laws, and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephones, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other operating expenses as shall be necessary for the due and effective administration of this act.

SEC. 5. That whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the national emergency hereby declared has passed he shall by proclamation declare the same, and thereupon this act shall no longer be in force or effect, and in no event shall it continue in force and effect for longer than one year from the passage thereof.

SEC. 6. That for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, including personal services and every other expense incident to the enforcement thereof, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in view of the motion which I have just made I shall review, with such brevity as is possible, the provisions of the Senate committee bill as it has been proposed to be amended by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Section 1 of the Senate committee bill declares the emergency and the character of the emergency. It reads as follows:

That by reason of prolonged interruption in the operation of a substantial part of the coal-mining industry in the United States and of impairment in the service of certain common carriers within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission and engaged in commerce among the States, a national emergency exists which threatens to obstruct and hamper the operation of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, the transportation of the mails, the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign countries, and to furnish an opportunity for the disposition of coal and other fuel at unreasonably high prices.

This is the emergency which is declared by Congress. We do not delegate to any officer, executive officer, or administrative officer, or body the authority to declare the emergency. The Congress declares it. That the emergency is very real no one will dispute. The bill, however, is intended to deal with a single phase of the emergency, namely, the opportunity for the disposition of coal and other fuel at unreasonably high prices. The second section of the bill reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, including the transportation act, 1920, and especially under section 402 of said transportation act, 1920, during the aforesaid emergency, enlarged to include the authority to issue in interstate transportation of coal or other fuel orders for priorities, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier, or region, or person, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for the priority in transportation and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency and serve the public interest and to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

I may remark that section 1 of the Senate committee bill is not essentially different from section 1 of the House bill, concerning which some discussion was had yesterday. There is, however, a marked essential difference between section 2 of the Senate committee bill and section 5 of the House bill, which is the corresponding section in the measure passed by the House of Representatives.

The first point of difference, and it is the fundamental one, is that the House bill attempts to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to embargo coal produced in a State and transported from the mines to points within that State or to embargo against a dealer the transportation of coal from one point in a State to another point within that State. I find myself utterly unable to accept the bill of the House in that particular. I do not believe it would be wise to attempt it even if we had the authority to do it. I am very firm in my conviction that Congress has no authority to clothe the Interstate Commerce Commission with power to lay an embargo upon coal or other fuel that is simply being transported from one point in a State to another point in the same State. I would, for that reason if for no other, ask the substitution which I have proposed. We must prepare ourselves to do the best we can to reconcile the difference between the House and the Senate upon that point.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the House bill propose to place a direct embargo on intrastate shipments, or does it propose to accomplish the embargo by taking all the cars for interstate business? It seems to me undoubtedly they have no authority to do the first.

Mr. CUMMINS. The House bill makes no distinction between interstate and intrastate transportation; none whatever.

The second point of difference between the Senate committee bill and the House bill, so far as section 2 of the Senate committee bill is concerned, is that the House uses this language:

And to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for the priority in car service and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency, prevent extortion in prices charged for coal and other fuel, and promote the general welfare.

The Senate bill uses this language:

and to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

Whether there is any difference between the word "extortion" and the word "unreasonable" I shall not pause to consider. It is sufficient to say that in all these regulatory acts we have adhered to the words "fair, just, and reasonable," and I think it is much better in describing the circumstances under which an embargo may be issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission to employ the words "unjustly or unreasonably high" rather than the word "extortion," which is less understood, at least in the administration of regulatory laws, and would not furnish a court or any other tribunal with the same guide that the words "unjust and unreasonable" would supply. Those are the two differences in section 2 of the Senate bill as compared with section 5 of the House bill.

I now come to devote myself for a moment to the position taken by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. As I understand, his attitude is that this bill adds nothing to the existing law, and therefore is unnecessary. I do not understand him to object to the proposed law because it is unconstitutional or to object to it because it may indirectly control the price of a particular dealer or of a particular operator. My impression from his very able and very comprehensive discourse on yesterday is that it is of no value whatever; that the commission already has all the power that this bill would give or would attempt to give it; and, furthermore, that we do not in this bill reach the real difficulty which now exists in the United States, namely, the existence of a strike which has not only prevented the normal production of coal but another strike which has prevented the normal operation of railways.

I admit at once that this bill does not have any tendency whatever to prevent strikes; it does not concern itself with disputes between employers and employees, or with the best manner of adjusting, settling, or adjudicating such disputes. There is nothing in the bill which can possibly have that effect. I admit that, fundamentally, that is the trouble which has come upon the United States; but it does not follow that because this bill will neither prevent strikes nor compose them after they have become accomplished facts it is therefore useless or unnecessary. The argument simply points out that at the proper time we must go forward and deal with these fundamental industrial troubles.

I admit also, as stated by both the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], that this bill will not return a single disabled engine to the service, nor will it repair a single car that has become unfit for service. Those are great problems to which we must very soon give our undivided, our earnest, and our courageous attention. This bill is confined to one object, and it springs from the hope that if the bill shall become a law during the time the present strike is in existence, during the time that the carriers are unable to perform their functions in an adequate way, that those who are disposed to take advantage of that deplorable condition may be prevented from doing so, and that the people of the country may secure whatever coal is produced and whatever coal the transportation companies can carry to the points of consumption at a reasonable price. That is the whole purpose of the bill.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

[At this point a colloquy took place which appears at the conclusion of Mr. CUMMINS's speech.]

Mr. CUMMINS. Recalling the discussion to the point I was presenting when I was interrupted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], I suggest to the Senator from Alabama a reconsideration of his views with respect to the powers bestowed by this bill upon the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I repeat, the Senator from Alabama believes that the bill is of no value because the Interstate Commerce Commission now has the authority this bill attempts to give that commission, and that therefore the bill will accomplish nothing, even if it be passed. It is to that point I desire for a moment to address myself.

The Senator from Alabama yesterday read one section, and a vital section, with regard to the present power of the commission, but that is not the only section which has reference to the powers of the commission with regard to the distribution of coal, and I take the liberty of reading paragraph 12 of section 1 of the present law. It became a part of the present law through the transportation act of 1920. It reads as follows:

It shall also be the duty of every carrier by railroad to make just and reasonable distribution of cars for transportation of coal among the coal mines served by it, whether located upon its line or lines or customarily dependent upon it for car supply. During any period when the supply of cars available for such service does not equal the requirements of such mines it shall be the duty of the carrier to maintain and apply just and reasonable ratings of such mines and to count each and every car furnished to or used by any such mine for transportation of coal against the mine. Failure or refusal so to do shall be unlawful, etc.

Here is a specific direction given to the Interstate Commerce Commission with regard to the supply of cars to coal mines. Then I come to section 15, which does contain the authority to issue priority orders and lay embargoes. I will not read the entire paragraph, because the Senator from Alabama read it yesterday. The first part of the paragraph declares that whenever the commission is of opinion that there is a shortage of equipment, and so forth, it shall have authority to suspend, and so on. Then follows this:

(d) To give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movement of traffic under permits, at such time and for such periods as it may determine, and to modify, change, suspend, or annul them.

However the Senator from Alabama may interpret these two paragraphs, a part of which I have read, I am sure he will agree that there is room for another reasonable interpretation. My opinion on this question was not formed for the purposes of this argument. It is one that was formed after some study, and I advised those who were connected with the fuel administration that, in my judgment, when paragraph 12 and paragraph 15 are considered together the Interstate Commerce Commission did not have the authority to lay an embargo simply because a coal operator or a coal dealer who would be affected by the embargo was exacting from the persons with whom he is dealing an unfair or unjust price. That is my opinion still.

It may be that the Senator from Alabama is giving it a fuller and more correct construction, but at least he will admit that there is room for difference of opinion, and inasmuch as that difference of opinion prevents the Interstate Commerce Commission from acting in the way of laying an embargo or preventing a coal operator or a coal dealer who is selling his coal at an exorbitant price from having the use of cars to transport his commodity in interstate commerce there ought to be no hesitation about enacting this bill, if that be the only objection to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator has been so courteous and kind this morning that his speech has been interrupted many times, and I therefore dislike to interrupt him again.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator has referred to my statement the other day, and if he will be kind enough to allow me I should like to make just this suggestion: I am familiar with the paragraph to which the Senator has referred. In fact, serving together on the committee which prepared the bill on the part of the Senate, we have discussed the issue before.

As the Senator well knows, the rule of construction is that in construing two paragraphs or two sections of a bill they must be read, if possible, so that each shall have its full and vital power, and not to destroy one paragraph by a construction of the other paragraph. The Senator knows that the paragraph which was put in with regard to coal was not put in with the idea of Congress—and the debates in this Chamber will reflect this viewpoint—of preventing the shipment of coal or the levying of an embargo, but was injected into the bill to guarantee to every producer of coal in the United States an equitable distribution of cars for his service. That is all it was for, so that each might have an equitable distribution of cars to serve his mines.

On the other hand, paragraph 15, in authorizing the commission to lay an embargo, was intended to place within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to levy an embargo to guard against a national disaster, if one confronted the country, or a great injury to business. It seems to me the construction the Senator puts upon the two paragraphs, construing them together—that the fact that we directed that there should be equal distribution of cars to the mines is negative of section 15 where we gave the power to levy an embargo and meet an emergency—is a construction which is in violation of all the rules of construction, because if we put that construction on the two paragraphs then we make paragraph 15 negative paragraph 12, the paragraph which already requires equal distribution of cars, when if we take the debates and consider the question as it was presented to Congress and the purpose of the legislation there is no necessity for that construction. It is not within the reason of what we attempted to do. We merely by section 12 guaranteed to the mines an equal distribution of cars, not to meet an emergency but to see that each mine got a fair opportunity for cars for the distribution of coal; but we put section 15 in there to meet an emergency in transportation that could not be met except by drastic measures.

In the first place, I want the Senator to understand that my objection to the bill has not been based on the proposition that it was hurtful to reenact the law, if it is constitutional. I have doubts in my mind as to whether the provisions of the bill attempting to fix prices in this indirect way are constitutional, but I realize that there is a great emergency which confronts the people of the United States.

The purpose of my discussion yesterday was not to negative the bill, because I realize there is something in the bill of great value, and that is an appropriation of $250,000. Whether the Interstate Commerce Commission exercise this power, as I believe they have a right to do under existing law, or whether they exercise the power under the bill which the Senator has proposed, I realize that they need some money, and I have no objection to giving them the $250,000 necessary to allow them to meet the emergency. That was not the purpose of my discussion at all.

Yesterday I simply attempted to point out the fact that, regardless of the passage of the bill, the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to act and that its action along this line does not meet the emergency which confronts the country; that it is not a coal strike that is making the people suffer, but it is a railroad strike which does not enable the producers of coal to deliver the coal at the door of the consumer, who is badly in need of it. That was the sole purpose of my argument in this case. It was not to resist the Senator's bill, but to point out the fact that we are proceeding here with legislation which, in my judgment, does not meet the situation, does not enlarge the powers of the Government, and only gives the Interstate Commerce Commission $250,000 to be effective, and leaves the situation just as it was when the measure was brought into the Senate. I think the Senate should pause and seriously consider, before we pass the bill, as to whether or not we are going to put powers within the bill which meet the real emergency that confronts the country.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have evidently misunderstood the general position taken by the Senator from Alabama. While I do not agree with him with respect to the power that is given to the Interstate Commerce Commission under section 15 or section 12 of the interstate commerce act, and while I believe that the bill is necessary to enable the commission to act in a way and for the purposes described, and that we ought to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission this addidtional power, yet if the Senator from Alabama does not intend to oppose the bill upon that ground I shall not dwell a single moment longer upon that phase of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell the Senator candidly the only question that makes me hesitate about voting for the bill, although I do not think it is effective, but it does not work injury to twice enact the same statute. We could enact the same statute twice and it would not work injury, so I am not objecting to it on the ground that they already have the power. The only question in the world that confronts me and makes me doubt as to whether I should vote for the bill is the question as to whether it is in the power of the Congress under the Constitution of the United States to attempt, in this indirect method, to regulate coal prices. I have no objection in an emergency to regulating the price if we can, because I think this is a real emergency in the country, where we should carry the coal to the consumers at reasonable prices if we can do so without violating the Constitution of the United States. But is the bill constitutional? That each Senator must determine for himself when it is before the Senate; he is precluded from voting for it if he concludes for himself that it is inhibited by the Constitution of the United States. But on that point I have not reached a conclusion, and I am listening to the Senator to hear what he has to say on the subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I said a moment ago, in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, I shall not analyze the two statutes to show, as I think I could show, that there is authority in the bill which we now propose to enact that is not contained in the law as it now exists. I pass on, as I am engaged now in pointing out the differences between the two bills.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator passes from the discussion of the two provisions of the bill I should like to supplement with this comment what was said on the subject by the Senator from Alabama. It occurs to me that paragraph 12 expresses a duty on the part of the railroad companies with respect to the furnishing of cars for the use of the mines. Paragraph 15 prescribes certain authority of the commission with respect not to coal mines particularly but generally. It occurs to me that the two sections are not in any sense in conflict. Paragraph 12 prescribes the duty of the railroad companies to furnish the cars for use at the mines as therein prescribed.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator did not understand me to say they were in conflict, did he?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh no. But the idea did occur to me that it was intended to provide that the commission could make orders of priority or embargo as provided in subdivision (d) of paragraph 15, and of course then paragraph 12 would not be operative. In other words, the duty of the carriers would be modified by the provision of subdivision (d).

Mr. CUMMINS. If no Senator intends to vote against the bill because it is simply a duplication of authority, I shall not continue the argument to any great extent, but I can give the Senator from Montana my own view about it. I think that paragraph 15 gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to lay an embargo upon any commodity. The issuing of a priority order is not confined to coal, but I think the power is limited to the distribution of the commodity. I think the commission has the authority to say that the coal mined at a certain mine shall be transported only to a certain place and used for a certain purpose, or to issue an order as to any other commodity that may be essential or vital in the life of the people.

I think it enables the Interstate Commerce Commission to say that a certain quantity of coal shall be assigned to a certain industry or to a certain public utility. All these things I feel sure the commission has the authority to do. The commission exercised that authority in 1920, as it exercised the authority in 1921. But I venture to say that it has never dreamed of exercising that authority in order to prevent unfair, unjust, and unreasonable prices.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is just the point with respect to which I want to get the views of the Senator. The power is given here to give direction for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movements of traffic under permit at such time and for such purpose as it may determine and to modify, change, suspend, or annul them. There is absolutely no restriction whatever.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there is. That is the difference between the Senator from Montana and myself. I think that the whole atmosphere which surrounded the enactment of the law, what might be called the spirit of the law, restrains or restricts the commission from exercising the power of creating priorities and laying embargoes for the purpose of controlling or regulating prices.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But could the Senator express the rule of restriction? By what rule is the Interstate Commerce Commission governed with respect to these embargoes? How is it limited? By what rule is it limited?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a rule against discrimination. I do not believe that paragraph 15 destroys the entire interstate commerce law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. I think if there were two mines side by side, equally meritorious, and each wanting to supply a utility or other consumer, under the order of the commission, the commission could not say to one mine "You shall have the entire business" and to the other mine "You shall not ship any coal."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If there is such a restriction in the proposed statute, it, of course, is implied; it is not expressed; and I agree with the Senator from Iowa that probably it is implied by reason of constitutional principles.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but if there are no——

Mr. CUMMINS. Not of constitutional principles alone, because there are a half dozen paragraphs or sections in the interstate commerce act prohibiting discrimination.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but subdivision 12 of the transportation act clearly expresses that rule as to coal mines; it goes into details, providing that there shall be no discrimination with respect to them; but, of course, the rule of no discrimination is subject to the exception of subdivision (d) of paragraph 15, for, undoubtedly, the commission can discriminate and impose embargoes and preferences and priority orders; so that the rule of no discrimination, it seems to me, is subject to discretion vested in the board by the provisions of subdivision (d).

Mr. CUMMINS. The discrimination prohibited by the law is unjust discrimination, unfair discrimination. There is no provision in the interstate commerce law which forbids all discrimination; but there is a prohibition—and it occurs many times in the statute—against unjust discrimination; and I assume that the Interstate Commerce Commission takes the position, although I have not conferred with any member of that commission upon the subject, that, in view of all the provisions of the law, it has no authority to say that a coal mine shall not be supplied with cars if the coal operator is charging unfair and unjust prices for his product.

If the present law gives the Interstate Commerce Commission that authority—and I assume that that is the view of the Senator from Montana—or, at least, if it gives them that authority so far as Congress can confer authority of that character, then it becomes immaterial—there is no harm in again giving it to them in order that the commission may exercise it, for it will not exercise it now. It has not exercised it and it will not exercise it; and the reason that it refuses to do so is because its members believe that it has no power under the statute to do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no answer to make to the argument of the Senator, that the commission, having the power, it would do no harm to grant it again; but I wish to submit that if the rule governing discriminations is such as now suggested by the Senator from Iowa, namely, that discriminations may be made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but that unjust discriminations may not be made by them, then it certainly is not the intention of this proposed statute to give the commission the power to make unjust discriminations. If they have power to make just discriminations, if that is the rule, then the pending bill can be condemned as authorizing unjust discriminations.

Mr. CUMMINS. The argument, it seems to me, is purely academic, and I, therefore, do not intend to pursue it further.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. I shall not branch off into another line of discussion as I did before.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota whether he branches off or not, for I am always glad to hear him.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call attention to a condition which existed in 1917. We in the Northwest were then confronted with pretty nearly the same condition as now exists, but the condition at that time arose from a car shortage and not because of a strike.

There was plenty of coal, but large consumers in the West, in Chicago and other places, for instance, were offering the coal producers a larger price than they could get by shipping their coal to the Lake Erie ports and from there by water to Duluth and other points on Lake Superior. The Interstate Commerce Commission at that time intervened and enabled us to get coal, and to get it in this way: They ordered shipments to be made to the Lake ports before navigation closed. Indirectly the same situation will develop again; that is, the coal producers will be offered greater prices by some other locality and will insist on shipping their coal there. The Interstate Commerce Commission, however, can intervene and say, "This coal is needed more urgently at the Lake ports than at any other place," and order it to be shipped to those ports, so that it may be carried by water before navigation closes on the Lakes. In that way this proposed legislation can help us.

Mr. CUMMINS. The danger which the Senator from Minnesota points out is a very real danger, for, indeed, I do not believe that the Government has it in its power to get or that there is any instrumentality known to the industry of the United States that can get the required amount of coal to the head of the Lakes. There is bound to be a very great shortage of coal during the entire winter throughout the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and a part of my own State, which uses and must use coal from Kentucky, Illinois, or West Virginia.

I need not dwell upon the similarity or dissimilarity of sections 3 and 4 of the Senate bill as compared with sections 3, 4, and 7 of the House bill. While they differ in phraseology there is no substantial difference between them.

The next difference of real importance between the House and the Senate bills will be found in section 9, for which there is no equivalent section or provision in the Senate bill. Section 9 of the House bill provides:

SEC. 9. Every person or corporation who shall knowingly offer, grant, or give, or solicit, accept, or receive any concession or discrimination in respect of car service as the same is defined in paragraph (10) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, in violation of any order, direction, or rule of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect thereto, or who shall by any willful misrepresentation or by any fraudulent device or means whatsoever procure or cause to be issued any order or direction for priority hereunder, or whoever having obtained coal or other fuel through a priority order or direction shall dispose of the same for purposes other than those for which said priority order or direction was issued without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000.

Then there is a proviso which explains in some degree—or, possibly, modifies in some degree—the provisions I have just read.

The Senate bill acts entirely upon common carriers; the House bill acts in a measure, as will be observed from the section I have just read, upon others than carriers. I am in sympathy with the spirit and the purpose of the House provision, but I think it needs considerable revision. I do not intend to discuss the respects in which I think it may be lacking in certainty or in justice, but if the motion which I have made shall prevail the whole section will be in conference, to be considered by the conferees and reported afterwards to the Senate.

A further difference between the House bill and the Senate bill is found in section 10. Each of the bills proposes to appropriate $250,000 for the enforcement of the provisions of the proposed act. I want here to say that the Senator from Alabama interpreted or analyzed the pending measure with absolute accuracy when he said that the fuel distributor will simply be an arm of the Interstate Commerce Commission and will have no other function except to carry out and help to enforce the orders of priority and of embargo which that commission may issue and to supply the commission with such information as he may be able to gather.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What is the Senator's understanding or what is meant by the term "embargo" in this bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I take it that to embargo is to prevent a shipment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is, we would authorize an embargo against a private individual or company?

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. The Senator from Alabama contends that the law now authorizes that; and I think that is also the conclusion of the Senator from Montana. I may be wrong in thinking that it requires additional legislation to give the commission that authority, and this proposed legislation is intended to do that very thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that the commission is exercising its power to create embargoes right now. It did so during the war. I know of a company in my home town which acquires from the furnaces slag which it sells for road-building purposes; it has a large business; but during the war, because the commission exercised the right of embargo and refused to let it have cars, it shut up its plant and suffered great loss. It is a very meritorious company; it had been guilty of no wrong; but the commission said they could not let it have cars to move slag for road-building purposes. I have a letter lying on my desk, which came in this morning, from one of the officers of the Birmingham Slag Co., which is the company to which I have referred, in which he says that since the 29th day of July, I believe, the commission have refused to let that company have any cars to move its product. That is an embargo, and the commission are exercising the authority to impose embargoes now, because they are transferring those cars, which are open dumps and necessary for coal purposes, to the coal mines. There can be no question about their exercising the authority.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly the Interstate Commerce Commission has laid embargoes upon a great many kinds of freight, and the very instance cited by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] yesterday to the effect that the commission has now released certain open-top cars from the requirement that they be used only in the transportation of coal indicates just what an embargo is.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I think I see a very great difference. Of course, two things might operate to bring about the same result; but I see a great difference between the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the exercise of a discretion or judgment as to what particular class of goods ought to be first moved, allocating cars to move that class of goods, the result being that there may not be cars for another class of goods—I see a great difference between that, which is merely giving a preferential service, and the commission sitting down and writing a declaration to the effect that a certain man shall not have cars at all because he has done something that offends the commission; and that is the use that I think is likely to be made of this term "embargo." If it is not the use, then it is surplusage in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is to be used—that is, I hope it is to be used.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is one thing to say that you shall first haul perishable goods, and that if there are not enough cars to go around you shall give to the shipper of perishable goods the first preference, the result being that perhaps a man could not move coal or some other commodity; and it is quite another thing to say: "We hereby decree that the man having these other commodities shall not have a car." That is an embargo. That is the refusal by direction to a citizen of the United States of the right to use the highways of the United States; and I doubt the right of this Government to do anything of that sort. Of course, the other thing it can do. We can direct the cars to be given in preference to a particular class of freight, as long as the regulation is within the limits of reason; but I take it that it could not be an unreasonable and arbitrary act and be sustained by the courts.

I should like to see the word "embargo" out of this bill, because I believe it will be employed in just the manner I have indicated, by simply writing an order: "You shall furnish no cars to A, B, C, or D." If you leave that in the bill and if that is ever attempted, in my judgment the courts will say that it is beyond the power of Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the word "embargo" is in the existing law——

Mr. REED of Missouri. It may be.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it operates fully and completely upon the subject matter upon which it can operate. The very purpose of this bill—and if it is not a wise policy, then it should be defeated—is to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to embargo on account of the exaction of unreasonable prices for coal. If it is not worthy of being passed, then it ought to be defeated; but, mark you, in the law as it is the Interstate Commerce Commission found and declared the emergency. I am not willing to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to determine that an emergency exists, and use the power that is given in this bill. It would be very repugnant to me. I think Congress alone should determine the emergency which calls into exercise so grave a power as we are proposing now to confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator has already given the commission that power. He gave it under the transportation act. I cited a moment ago the instance of the Birmingham Slag Co. There was no reason in the world why it should not receive dump cars, flat cars. It was conducting a perfectly legitimate business; but your commission to-day is refusing to give cars to them because it wants to give those cars to the producers of coal.

It does not make any difference whether you are refusing to give cars to a man because he is charging too much money for his coal or whether you are taking cars away from a slag man because you say he shall not ship his product because you want to move coal. It is identically the same thing, for the same purpose and the same reason and the same power.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. They are doing the same thing with us. They refuse to give cars for coal to be shipped to certain people, and only give them when the coal is to be shipped to certain designated parties.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I have no doubt about the proposition that the present law gives the commission the authority to lay an embargo, and it has done it many times. It did it in 1920, and it did it in 1921, and it has repeated its authority in that respect in 1922. My proposition is—and I have said it so many times that I may weary you with it—that it has no power to lay an embargo against a man or an operator or a company simply because that man or operator or company is exacting unreasonably high prices for coal.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I do not weary the Senator, here is the gist of it: Let me ask him a question there. Suppose Smith is asking $20 a ton for coal and Jones is asking $5 a ton for coal. Does not the Senator concede that under the existing law when there are only so many cars that can be ordered to a tipple the Interstate Commerce Commission can order them to Jones, who is selling his coal for $5, instead of to Smith?

Mr. CUMMINS. It can not do it openly and frankly. It might by indirection do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It can do it. It has been doing it this summer.

Mr. CUMMINS. But if those two coal mines were both supplying the same utility, and were both within the priority order that had been issued, I do not think the Interstate Commerce Commission would be justified, under the existing law, in saying that all the cars must be delivered to the mine that was charging $5 a ton, and none of the cars to the mine that was charging $20 a ton.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not to meet a national emergency of this kind?

Mr. CUMMINS. We meet the national emergency, so far as that is concerned, if the coal is devoted to a particular use.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If they have not the right, morally and equitably, to meet that emergency and stop profiteering by giving the cars that they have to carry coal to the mine that is producing and selling the cheapest, then there is no justification for your bill at all, because they certainly can do it; they are doing it; but if you say they are not justified in doing it, then you say there is no justification——

Mr. CUMMINS. They are justified morally in doing it; but I say they have no authority in the law to do it; and they are not doing it, and they never have done it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They have a right to order their cars where they want them to go. They have gone so far in certain utilities that, if you carry out the argument, why should they discriminate, except to meet the emergency, between slag and coal? It is because of the emergency, and justly because of the emergency.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But, of course, if they can discriminate between slag and coal to meet the emergency, they can discriminate between coal and coke. There is no logic in that proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will give another illustration. Suppose there were two mine operators, and one had red hair and the other had black hair, and the Interstate Commerce Commission said: "We prefer to deal with the man with red hair and we will not give the black-haired man any cars." Does the Senator think the country would sustain a proposition of that sort?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but the only justification for your bill and the only reason why the country will sustain your bill for a moment is to meet an emergency, and they are authorized to make their discrimination under existing law to meet a national emergency which exists to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. I can not convince the Senator from Alabama that this bill is needed; but the reason that he gives for believing that the bill is not needed is one which can not incline him to vote against the bill, because he insists that the commission already has all the authority that is attempted to be conferred upon it by this bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I am not raising a question with the Senator about that, because I have no objection to your passing the statute twice if you want to do it. That is not the issue that I am raising at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. So that question becomes academic and I will not discuss it any further.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to interrupt the Senator for a question only, to see if I understand his explanation, in view of the discussion that has just taken place.

Do I understand the Senator's construction of the Esch-Cummins law to be that that related to transportation and distribution more particularly, and that the difference between that law and the powers there conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission and this bill is the concluding words of section 2, in which it is said:

And to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

I do not understand what is meant by inserting the word "purchase" there—to prevent a man from paying a high price for it. Really, what is desired is to prevent them from selling it for a high price; but that is trivial. Is that the distinction between this bill and the present law?

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission is concerned; yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is what I understood the Senator to say. Now, one other question: Did I understand the Senator to assent to the proposition which I think the Senator from Minnesota made, that under this bill the Interstate Commerce Commission could, on account of the necessities of a certain region, force a dealer or an operator to ship his coal and accept the price of $12, for instance, at the Lakes, when at St. Louis he could get $20 for it?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; but if the necessities of the Northwest be great, it can now, under the present law, prevent the use of cars for the purpose of shipping coal where it is not needed in order to supply the region in which the coal is needed.

Mr. SHIELDS. Regardless of the competition in price?

Mr. CUMMINS. It can do that now, and has done it.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then, if my understanding is correct, the distinction between this bill and the law now, to which the Senator assents, is that it is really a price-fixing bill under that concluding clause?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I refuse to assent to that phrase, although I have tried many times to indicate what I really thought the bill did authorize the commission to do. It is not a price-fixing bill, because a price-fixing bill would mean the creation of some commission that could say, for instance, that a fair price for coal is $3.50 a ton, and just issue that proclamation, or $2, or $10 a ton. No such authority is given in this bill.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But is there not authority to say that more than a certain price is an unfair price?

Mr. CUMMINS. It can say that with regard to a particular operator or a particular dealer.

Mr. REED of Missouri. When it says that, it then proceeds to take the cars away from that individual. Is not that the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; there is a vast difference between the two propositions in my opinion. We had price fixing during the war, and this bears no more resemblance to the operations of the Fuel Administration during the war than it bears to the ordinances which we suppose prevail in the heavenly land.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am not so sure that the Senator's illustration is not a little extreme. Suppose we took the prices of the last coal board and their classifications and the Interstate Commerce Commission should write above that, "No cars shall be furnished to any producer who charges more than the following scale of prices." You would have exactly the same thing which the coal board did, exactly the same result, exactly the same prices, unless the whole thing broke down, as the other might have broken down.

Before they can say what is an unreasonable price they must say what is a reasonable price, and that anything above that is unreasonable. That fixes the maximum price a mine can charge. It does not fix its minimum price. I do not understand that the coal board, in its worst days, ever said that a mine could not sell for less than their schedule of prices.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not material to this bill, but I will state what the Fuel Administration did during the war. Its purpose was, of course, to induce the maximum production of coal. In my own State it ascertained the cost of producing coal in the highest-cost mines, mines which did not produce quite 5 per cent of the coal that was mined and used. It fixed the price in my region so that the mines thus unfortunately situated would receive a fair profit on their coal, and that enabled the mine in the next township or the next county which produced coal for one-half the cost of the first mine to which I have referred to reap an enormous and unconscionable profit. I hope that there is nothing in this bill which can possibly have any such effect. I know there is not.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think I can show the Senator that that is inevitably the result, if not in degree at least in principle.

This board meets, and it starts in to determine what is a fair price for coal. How is it to determine it? It must take into consideration the costs of production, just as the other board took into consideration the costs of production. Having ascertained costs of production and added a profit, it will say that anything above that amount is unreasonable. That is just what the other board did.

But when the board undertakes to fix the figure above which the price of coal is unreasonable, if they fix it so low that the moderate-sized mines or the high-cost production mines can not operate, they immediately limit the production of coal and deny the country the benefit of that coal. Consequently when they fix a price which they say is a reasonable price they must fix that price high enough so that not only the best mines can operate under it, but, if not the poorest mine, at least the great mass of the mines can operate, and accordingly the best or lowest-cost mine will be permitted to make a very high profit, while the highest-cost mine that can operate at all may make almost nothing. So your rule works out in each case substantially the same when you put it to the touch of practical application.

Besides, as the Senator knows, it is impossible to classify these mines so that each mine shall have its costs ascertained and a price fixed for it. First, the job is interminable, and could not be done under a year's time. But if you did do it, then you would have a dozen mines, each of them producing the same character of coal, and the one which had a low price fixed as its maximum could sell its coal, but one that had a high price fixed as its maximum could not sell its coal at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand the bill as the Senator from Missouri understands it. The operation of the bill is upon the carrier, and so far as the coal operator is concerned, cars would not be denied to him if he were selling his coal, produced in his mine at his cost, with a fair profit. If it cost one coal operator $10 a ton to produce his coal, if he could sell it at $10 a ton, this bill would not operate to prevent him from doing it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That means an examination as to each mine.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well.

Mr. REED of Missouri. This is an emergency. Let us just deal with it candidly and fairly. Does the Senator think we could ascertain those costs of production, classify these mines, and settle the question as to what mine was entitled to cars and what was not, and what was the price at which it would be entitled to cars, in less than six or eight months' time?

Mr. CUMMINS. All the information which would be necessary in order to apply this law is in the hands of the fuel administration. I do not mean that it would be necessary to examine the cost of production in every wagon mine on every hillside, but that information is now in the hands of the fuel administration, and this bill could be applied in one-half hour after its passage, and applied intelligently and effectively.

Mr. REED of Missouri. They could not get a stenographer in half an hour.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, does the Senator think that if the result of this bill would be exorbitant prices, as indicated by the Senator from Missouri, the representatives of the coal operators would be about the city of Washington opposing the passage of this bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not probable, at least.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The purpose of everyone is to secure the maximum of production, and would not the proposal of the Senator from Iowa operate exactly in the opposite direction, if, as he says, this is to be directed at prices and to limit profits? He has just stated, as he stated yesterday evening, that if a man were operating a small mine and producing coal at a cost of $8 a ton, and selling it at $9 a ton, and that were regarded as a fair price by those charged with the operation of the machinery under this bill, he would not be interfered with; he would be making only a dollar a ton. If, on the other hand, a highly equipped mine, capable of producing 2,000 tons a day, were selling its coal at $5 a ton, and, by the economies possible to be practiced under such a highly equipped and well-organized mine, it was making $3 a ton, then an embargo, under this plan of procedure, would be laid against the highly organized mine operator, because he would be making higher profits?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not necessarily.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood the Senator's proposal to be directed to cutting down the price.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would depend on the cost of production, the amount of capital invested in the enterprise, and the other risks and hazards which accompany that business. I do not say that a mine operator who produces coal at a cost of $3 a ton is receiving an unreasonable profit, or charging an unreasonable price, if he sells the coal at $4 a ton. I do not pass upon that question. That is for the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine. Nor would it diminish the production of coal, unless an operator insisted upon closing down his mine if he could not secure an unreasonably high price for his product.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not want to take the Senator's time, but I did not understand the Senator to say that it was the intention, under this bill, that the Interstate Commerce Commission would figure out the profits of each mine, and see that each mine had only a reasonable profit. The intention of this bill is to transport in the commerce of the country the coal which will be amply produced, without permitting it to go to unreasonable and absurd prices, as it is being sold to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course no one contemplates having a survey of all the coal mines of the United States, and entering into a close and analytical examination of the cost of production in those mines. Those who have studied the subject know what a fair price is in the various parts of the country, in the large producing territories, and at the great mines of the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to ask the Senator how long he intended to continue his statement. This is such a very important bill and the matters under discussion are of such interest to the entire membership of the Senate that it seems to me we ought to have a larger attendance present, and I accordingly make the point of no quorum.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I suggest to the Senator, before that is done, that it will be very difficult, as everyone knows, to secure a quorum this afternoon. There is no expectation that the bill will be voted upon this afternoon. We already have entered into an agreement that when we close business to-day we will adjourn until Tuesday. I would like to have the Senator from West Virginia allow me to finish what I have to say, and then others can take up the subject. There will be no disposition to ask a vote upon any part of the bill this afternoon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me the Senator's statement should be heard by a larger proportion of the membership of this body. How, otherwise, will the Members of the Senate know how to vote, or know what the Senator has said upon the subject?

Mr. CUMMINS. What has been the observation of the Senator in regard to the number of Senators present when serious subjects of this sort were under discussion? I think we have quite as many as we usually have, probably more. I am unusually complimented by the number of Senators who are listening to me.

Mr. President, in view of the situation and knowing that it is impossible to obtain a quorum this afternoon I ask that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

During Mr. CUMMINS's speech,

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Iowa has made the matter so plain that I need hardly ask my question, but the whole purpose of the bill is to fix prices?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a malign sound in the phrase just used by the Senator from Missouri and possibly it might be misconstrued.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Well, let us say "to regulate prices."

Mr. CUMMINS. This is not a bill to fix prices. It is a bill to forbid transportation to one who is selling his coal at an unreasonable price.

Mr. REED of Missouri. With the purpose of compelling him to cut his price?

Mr. CUMMINS. There might be but one mine operator who would attempt to sell coal at an unreasonably high price; there might be but one such dealer—I am now fixing the minimum—who would attempt to commit extortion upon the public, and this proposed legislation would enable the commission—although there would be no definite judgment entered as to what is a reasonable price for coal—to deny to that person, whether he be an operator or a dealer, the facilities for interstate transportation; and it would also compel—I do not wish to evade the issue at all—that corporation or that person to sell its or his coal at a price which the Interstate Commerce Commission believed to be fair and reasonable.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly. Now—it does not take many words to say it—the object of the bill is to compel the producer of coal to sell at a price which the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other tribunal to be created considers a reasonable price. Of course, if there be only one operator to be affected it would not be worth while to endeavor to pass this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I stated was simply by way of illustration.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I so understand. It is intended to affect a substantial part of the production and to fix the price of coal by the refusal of cars. Does the Senator from Iowa believe that if we were to write that purpose squarely in the face of this bill the courts would not declare it to be unconstitutional?

Mr. CUMMINS. The purpose is written plainly on the face of the bill. The act which the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to perform and the conditions under which it may perform it are as plainly set out in the bill as is possible by any form of expression.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I hardly think they are as plainly set out as the Senator's statement would imply, but whether they are or not—and let us assume that they are—does the Senator believe that we have the power under the Constitution to do what the bill contemplates shall be done?

Mr. CUMMINS. I intend to discuss that when I come to the consideration of the legal phases of the bill. There is no human being who can tell at the present time what the Supreme Court certainly and definitely will hold to be a proper regulation of interstate commerce, but it is not too much to say—and I do not mean it as a criticism or disparagement of the Supreme Court—that there is from my standpoint a sad lack of harmony in the decisions of that tribunal with regard to the application of the authority given in the Constitution to regulate commerce among the States. I intend to show if I can that this bill proposes such regulation as will, in all probability, be sustained by the Supreme Court.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I do not agree with the statement which the Senator from Iowa has just made. He has disclaimed that he intended any attack upon the Supreme Court, and in that statement I know he is sincere, but especially in view of the child-labor decisions of the Supreme Court, which are not only pertinent to this question but almost directly in point.

I think the decisions in the recent child-labor case are directly applicable to the bill under consideration. Without going into a detailed discussion of those cases or of the opinion of the court, an attempt on the part of Congress, by indirection, to control a matter peculiarly and solely within the province of the police powers of the States was held void. Now, we are presented with the very same question, for the object of this bill is, by indirection, to control price fixing. That is the only difference between it and existing law, so far as I can see. It seems to me beyond question that the court will not be governed by mere phraseology; that it will not be controlled by indirection, but will cut through the phraseology of the bill and reach to the substance, as they did in the child-labor cases, and hold such a provision for fixing prices in contravention of the Constitution.

I have no sympathy with profiteers. They are like the men who follow up an army after a battle and rob the dead. The profiteers who are taking advantage of conditions to extort money from the people for a necessity are entitled to no sympathy; but, still, I believe in keeping within the Constitution. I do not believe that any so-called emergency or any real emergency justifies us in overturning the Constitution. We went too far during the war in doing that in our enthusiasm, in our patriotism, and our desire to support the administration and win the war. Both sides of the Chamber did it. There was no difference in this in the Republican Party or the Democratic Party. We were all Americans, and we supported the most extreme measures to prosecute the war successfully; but there is no Senator, no lawyer, who will stand here and deny that some of the laws then passed are no precedent to follow in times of peace.

My opinion is that Congress has done a great deal to break down the confidence of the country in our form of government and the respect of the people for the Constitution. We have done a great many things that have misled and corrupted the minds of the people as to constitutional law and constitutional government. I was astonished last night in reading the argument of a prominent lawyer of the Department of Justice to a committee of the House how far Congress might interfere with the police powers of the States. He referred to the action of the Senate in appointing a committee to investigate the coal troubles in West Virginia some six or eight years ago. He relied upon it as authority that the Congress could interfere with the police powers of the States, could provide for preventing mob violence, and matters kindred. If that made such an impression upon a lawyer, what impression will such a measure as this make upon the citizenship of the country?

I think we ought to be very careful in these matters. If the Congress of the United States violates the Constitution, what respect will the people have for it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I quite agree with the last statement of the Senator from Tennessee. I am only sorry that before reaching a definite and final conclusion upon the constitutionality of this bill he did not wait to hear what little I had to say with regard to it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I shall listen with a great deal of interest to what the Senator says.

Mr. CUMMINS. But has the Senator an open mind?

Mr. SHIELDS. I certainly have in any matter that the Senator from Iowa discusses.

Mr. CUMMINS. It occurs to me that the Senator has closed it pretty effectually.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, everybody concedes that a great emergency exists in the matter of supplying the people of this country with fuel. A most serious situation confronts us; and when we have such an emergency as this I think it is the duty of all of us to find some legislative or executive method of relief.

I never could see much good in raising all manner of constitutional objections to legislation that was intended to meet emergencies like this. It has always seemed to me that simply to raise a lot of constitutional objections, and then not propose any remedy but advocate permitting existing things to continue to exist, was a good deal like Nero fiddling when Rome was burning. I think it ought to be the aim of all of us in a great emergency like this to aid in finding legislative relief to protect the people of this country, and not to raise any technical or finical constructions of the Constitution.

The Senator from Tennessee has referred to the police power of the State. That is the trouble; the police power of the State has not been exercised in most of the States in this emergency. What is the situation? Under the Adamson law, passed during the administration of President Wilson, railroad labor was utterly demoralized in this country. At the time the Adamson law was passed the attitude of the railroad unions was to hold up the entire transportation system of the country. We yielded to that in passing the Adamson law, and what has been the result? Many of these railroad men since that time have been possessed with the idea that they controlled the country and that the Government of the United States was absolutely impotent.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I will yield to the Senator when I have finished.

Mr. SHIELDS. I thought the Senator had finished, as he seemed about to sit down.

Mr. NELSON. Now, we are confronted with an emergency. The shopmen have quit. They have struck, they have bid defiance to an order of the Railway Labor Board, and what is their attitude? No one denies the right of the unions to organize to enter into collective bargaining, or to quit their work. The trouble with the unions is that when they strike, as they call it, when they quit work, they stand with a club in their hands to prevent other men taking their places and doing the work which they have left. That is the trouble. As the Senator from Tennessee says, the police power belongs to the States in the first instance; but have the States exercised it? Look at Illinois, in the case of Herrin. If the governor and the executive department of that State had done their duty that massacre would not have occurred.

I have heard a good deal said in this Chamber about free speech. Any amount of eloquence has been poured out in this Chamber about liberty of speech, but I have heard very little eloquence about liberty of labor—liberty to work for a living. That is the great question which confronts the American people to-day: Shall an American citizen have a right to work? Shall he have freedom of labor? If we had as much eloquence on that subject as we have had on freedom of speech, we might accomplish something.

Mr. President, the great menace that confronts the country to-day is not so much interference with freedom of speech as it is interference with ability to work and earn an honest living without having men stand over you and threaten you.

I want to read a little communication I have received from a gentleman residing in a small town in Minnesota that happens to be a railroad station. I do not care about giving his name and putting it in the RECORD, for I am sure he would be subject to persecution from the strikers. He says:

> You are no doubt annoyed by much useless correspondence. I shall be brief. I want to say a few words in regard to the railway strike, some things that I know, and I say them to you as the only man in Congress who seems to have the courage to say what he thinks.
> This is a railroad town. These men have nothing to strike for, but have to obey Jewell, who defied the Labor Board. The board said they were outlaws, or words to that effect, and men were invited to take their places and promised protection; but what a crime it would be to deny them this protection!
> Many men are employed here now, and good men, too. I was called a few nights ago to see a sick machinist in a bunk car. I found there in that one car 11 fine fellows, all buddies in the war, and all sticking together. They went to the war from Hartford, Conn., and were and are polite, gentlemanly men. While they were fighting for their country in France these strikers were making eight or ten dollars a day just fussing around and doing very little, and since the war it has been the same. I have been through the roundhouse and shops often enough to know. They did not half work and were getting six to seven dollars a day. Now they want to keep these other men from working.
> The strike would have been settled long ago if there had been a little firmness and consistency. If men could receive protection they would work, but one hates to put his life in jeopardy. Men have been threatened and assaulted here. The shopmen need weeding out. I know five or six who are just agitators, so radical that they ought to be sent to Russia.
> Now, they talk of taking over the control of the roads, which is just what the unions want; just what they are waiting and hoping for! If the Government would adequately protect the workers the strike would soon be over. This is the opinion of three-fourths of the people not connected with the unions. I have lived here 22 years and I know the selfishness and lack of patriotism of most of these union birds, for I know them personally, and I know the real sentiment of the people. Most business men are afraid to say what they think for they are threatened by the strikers.

Mr. President, in this connection, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. CUMMINS. I have the floor, but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I am talking in the Senator's time. I will be through in just a little while.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. NELSON. In this connection I hold in my hand here, clipped from the New York Times of August 30, a list of the raids made by some of these railroad men in different parts of the country. The first is the case at Gary; then there is a case at Elkhart, Ind.; then there are cases at several other places; but I want to read you the last one, which is a sad case:

> SYRACUSE, N. Y., August 29.—Masked men in automobiles rode about East Syracuse last night and spread terror among the families of men who have taken the places of the striking shopmen in the New York Central yards in the village. The autos, filled with shouting strike sympathizers, visited at least six homes. Threats were made that the men would be beaten up if they did not give up their work, and some of the homes were stoned. Sheriff's deputies were called, but the automobile parties disappeared by the time they arrived from Syracuse.

No one can deny that nobody else but strikers would resort to that. The aim of the strikers is not only to quit work but to prevent other people from working, and the aim of our Government, State and Federal, ought to be to protect all men who desire to work and are willing and fit to work, and if our Government fails in that our Government is wanting in its duty to the public of America.

I ask that this newspaper clipping to which I have referred, and from which I have quoted, may be inserted in my remarks, and I desire to thank the Senator from Iowa for yielding to me.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, August 30, 1922.]

REVEAL PLOT TO WRECK "TWENTIETH CENTURY"—CONFESSIONS FOLLOWING GARY WRECK TELL OF DESIGN—ROAD IS WELL GUARDED, OFFICIALS SAY.

CHICAGO, August 29.—Confessions obtained from some of the five men held in connection with wrecking the "Million Dollar Express" on the Michigan Central near Gary, Ind., on August 20 have also bared a plot to wreck the Twentieth Century Limited, crack New York-Chicago train, near Elkhart, Ind., the police said to-day.

Bombing of the homes of railroad employees at Bloomington, Ill., and Montgomery, Ala.; the shooting of a Chicago & Alton watchman in Chicago; a gun fight between railroad guards and a sniper at Moline, Ill.; and the dynamiting of a bridge at Spuds, Fla., were among strike disorders reported from different sections of the country.

Discovery of an inflammable bomb near a gasoline storage tank at Flint, Mich., increased the rapidly growing list of reports of violence.

ELKHART, IND., August 29.—Every foot of the New York Central right of way is being closely guarded day and night, John Kuespert, captain of the New York Central police department here, said to-day, referring to confessions of the Gary prisoners that they plotted wrecking the Twentieth Century Limited near Elkhart.

"Our best men are constantly on guard and all suspicious characters found near the tracks are taken into custody," Captain Kuespert added.

OSWEGO, N. Y., August 29.—Police to-day investigated an explosion of dynamite which last night tore off the porch and partially wrecked the home of Albert Johnson. Johnson's son, the police claimed, was for a time out on strike from the New York Central shops here, but recently returned to work.

No one was injured, but members of the family were shaken up and thrown out of bed. Two weeks ago a similar explosion occurred in New Haven, a village near here.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., August 29.—Masked men in automobiles rode about East Syracuse last night and spread terror among the families of men who have taken the places of the striking shopmen in the New York Central yards in the village. The autos, filled with shouting strike sympathizers, visited at least six homes. Threats were made that the men would be beaten up if they did not give up their work, and some of the homes were stoned. Sheriff's deputies were called but the automobile parties disappeared by the time they arrived from Syracuse.

Louis Coffin, 39, of Kirkville, a railroad workman, was attacked without warning and badly beaten by four men on the main street of Minoa this morning.

DANVILLE, ILL., August 29.—Four bombs were exploded at the shops of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad early to-day, but little damage was done.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee, not for a discussion of the matter at issue but for a question.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will be very brief. The Senator from Minnesota is a great lawyer and a great Senator, and chairman of the great Judiciary Committee. I agree with him that some grievous outrages are being committed against men who want to make an honest living for their wives and children. I have condemned those things heretofore on this floor and shall continue to do so. But he has suggested no remedy. His party is in power. It controls every branch of the Government. It controls the Executive and both Houses of the Congress. With his views about these matters, why does he not introduce a bill to prevent such things? Why does he not introduce a bill to amend the Clayton law, in so far as it exempts those who organize a national strike to starve and to freeze the people of the United States from the provisions of the Sherman law? What is the use of getting up here and talking about it when he has the power to act? He defies organized labor in words, but takes no action to suppress its wrongful action.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not yield for a discussion of these questions. They are entirely foreign to the argument I am making.

Mr. SHIELDS. But the Senator yielded to the Senator from Minnesota for a discussion of those questions, and I am answering him.

Now as to the bill. The mere fact that laws which violated the Constitution have been enacted heretofore is no excuse for enacting one now. Notwithstanding the usual course of the Senator in standing by the Constitution, he criticizes me for opposing a violation of it, without giving any argument to support his position, simply because an emergency exists, as he says. I do not see the consistency or the logic of his position. If this law is unconstitutional, we should observe our oaths and vote against it. If it is constitutional and will afford the remedy the Senator from Iowa thinks it will and give relief, it should be supported. But I do not believe in violating the Constitution, in overthrowing this form of government, because of a mere temporary emergency, especially this coal strike, part of which has already been settled and part of which the press this morning says will be settled within 24 hours. The Senator from Minnesota would seem to favor the Constitution when it suits him, but forgets it when it stands in the way of legislation he desires passed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I would like to reply, but I do not feel like taking up more of the time of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will have no objection at all to yielding to the Senator from Minnesota to reply if I can have this understanding: The Senator from Minnesota made a very eloquent and a very impressive speech, and the Senator from Tennessee has replied to it. I would like to have the observations of the Senator from Minnesota printed in the RECORD as his own speech and not incorporated in mine, and I would like to have the order made with regard to the reply of the Senator from Tennessee. If that can be done, I will have no objection to yielding to the Senator from Minnesota to make whatever further observations he wants to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and the RECORD will be arranged accordingly.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection. I can readily see how the Senator from Iowa is afraid of dynamite.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not afraid of dynamite. The Senator from Minnesota has made that suggestion several times. There is nothing in it. But the question of the strike is not pertinent to this particular bill. I am for antistrike legislation. The Senator from Minnesota knows that.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say, in regard to that, that we are having a sufficient amount of bituminous coal mined. It is a question of the distribution of that coal by railroads, and the Senator knows the condition we are in in the Northwest.

We have to get our supply from Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia shipped to the lake ports on Lake Erie and from there up to Superior and Duluth during the season of navigation. That is our method of distribution. If we can not get the coal up to the lake ports and shipped that way our people in the Northwest, northern Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota, will suffer during the winter. So that to-day the distribution depends more on railroad transportation because the boat transportation is ready on the Lakes to take the coal up to Superior and Duluth.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it depends entirely on boat transportation. I have said that in the most positive and emphatic way. But while we are trying to get the transportation I do not think the dealers in coal or the operators in coal ought to have an opportunity to extort from your people in Minnesota and my people in Iowa the prices which are now being exacted for coal.

Mr. NELSON. I do not want to break up the argument of the Senator, but if he will allow me, the only relief under this bill in the way of regulating prices will be through the denial of priority shipments. Is there any other method proposed in the bill to restrain the high prices of the profiteers? If there is, I fail to grasp it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Priority is an embargo, that is all. If Senators do not believe that this will give their country any relief they ought not to vote for the bill. Of course that is a privilege every Senator has, to vote against it if he thinks it will not furnish relief so far as prices are concerned in the immediate future.

SOUTH DAKOTA MEMORIAL STONE IN WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, some time ago exercises were held in the Washington Monument in connection with the dedication of a memorial stone placed in the monument by the State of South Dakota. There was a program of exercises, and short addresses were made by members of the South Dakota delegation in Congress and by a few other residents and former residents of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent that those proceedings be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as has been done in the case of like exercises held by other States.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

PROCEEDINGS HELD IN THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., UPON THE DEDICATION OF THE MEMORIAL STONE PLACED IN THAT MONUMENT BY THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, ON JUNE 22, 1922, SENATOR THOMAS STERLING PRESIDING.

Rev. Peirce Pinch, formerly of Huron, S. Dak., offered the following invocation:

"Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we would acknowledge Thee in all our ways, and we thank Thee for the promise that Thou wilt direct our paths. We confess the goodness of God in Thy dealing with the great Commonwealth represented here to-day. We thank Thee for its history; we thank Thee, O God, for the resources with which Thou hast given men to deal; we thank Thee even for the difficulties which make strong men and women. We praise Thee, O God, for the part this State has in the life of this great Nation; that she has not been found wanting at the country's call; and now, O God, as to-day we dedicate that which is given by the State to be a part of this great monument, we pray that the State may feel itself to be more than ever a part of the great Commonwealth of States that constitute the Nation.

"Do Thou be in the message that shall be spoken unto us this day. Grant, O God, that this may be one of the great occasions that cultivate that patriotic spirit, that spirit of devotion, which constitutes the glory of the Nation.

"We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen."

ADDRESS BY SENATOR STERLING.

Senator THOMAS STERLING delivered the presentation address, as follows:

"Mr. Secretary, fellow South Dakotans, and friends: I give you all a hearty welcome. It is an occasion such as puts me in a reminiscent mood, and I feel like invoking for a little while the muse, not of poetry but of history:

"All the territory embraced in the two Dakotas was a part of the great Louisiana Purchase of 1803, consummated when Thomas Jefferson was President of the United States and the First Napoleon was Emperor of France.

"It was separately organized as a Territory of the United States in 1861, and Doctor William Jayne, of Springfield, Ill., whom I in after years well knew, was appointed its first governor by President Lincoln.

"To those of us who once lived in the Territory of Dakota this happy commemoration is like another milestone along the pathway of our lives. This granite slab, with the facsimile of the great seal of the State of South Dakota thereon, brings to mind the many years of effort and struggle for the division of that great Territory and the admission of the south half to the sisterhood of States. One of the most important steps in the movement for statehood was the first of three constitutional conventions held in the city of Sioux Falls in September, 1883. That convention brought together many who were, and for years before had been, most active in their efforts to secure recognition of the just claims of our people to all the 'rights, privileges, and immunities' of the people of other States of the Union.

"To name a few of those of that first convention who have passed on to the great beyond.

"There were Judge J. P. Kidder, of Clay County; Hon. A. C. Mellette, of Codington, last Territorial and first State governor; Judge Gideon C. Moody, of Lawrence, one of the two first United States Senators; Oscar S. Gifford, of Lincoln County, later Territorial Delegate at Washington; Alphonso G. Kellam, of Brule, one of the first three of our supreme court judges; Judge W. W. Brookings and Melvin Grigsby, of Sioux Falls; John R. Gamble, elected to Congress in 1890, but who died before taking his seat in that body; Gen. Hugh J. Campbell; George H. Hand, secretary of the Territory of Dakota; Rev. Joseph Ward, president of Yankton College; and Bartlett Tripp, president of the convention and the last chief justice of the Territory of Dakota.

"The true history of South Dakota can not be written without some mention of their work and their devotion to the cause of division and statehood. Knowing them as I did, I deem it fitting here to pay this brief tribute to their memories and the sacrifices they made for that cause.

"Our early hopes of admission were to be long deferred. A second constitutional convention, that of 1885, was held under the authority of the Territorial legislature. Its work was ratified by a vote of the people, as had been the constitution of 1883. And now the scene shifts to Washington, where for years the contest over the question of the division of the Territory and the admission of the States of North and South Dakota was waged. Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, later President, but then chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories, was the first leader in that fight. He was succeeded by Senator Platt, of Connecticut, but with these other great names were associated Senators Cushman K. Davis, of Minnesota; John C. Spooner, of Wisconsin; William B. Allison, of Iowa; John Sherman, of Ohio; Shelby M. Cullom, of Illinois; George F. Edmunds, of Vermont, all able champions of our cause on the floor of the Senate. In the course of the debate Senator Edmunds said: 'It is not only the duty of Congress to admit new States, but it is the duty of the people of the Territories when possessing the requisite conditions to form a constitution and fix a seat of government and apply for admission.'

"The culmination came in the passage of what was known as the omnibus bill, as it was called, the great enabling act, which provided for the admission into the Union on certain conditions of the four great Commonwealths—the two Dakotas, Montana, and Washington—on an equal footing with the original States. It is worthy of note that the enabling act was approved February 22, 1889, the anniversary of the birth of him whose monument through the ages to come will give shelter and a resting place to this tablet of pure South Dakota granite, as firm and enduring as is the name of Washington, to whose memory we reverently dedicate it.

"The conditions imposed by the enabling act were joyously complied with by the people of South Dakota. It was fitting, indeed, that the act should provide that the constitutional conventions for the four States to be admitted should assemble on the 4th day of July, 1889. To South Dakotans it gave the Declaration of Independence a new significance. A Territory no longer, the government, both National and State, would be, when admission was accomplished, with 'the consent of the governed.' The two elements which have made our Nation great, a pride in the resources and progress of the individual State and loyalty to the Union, were to be henceforward among the most cherished possessions of our South Dakota citizenship.

"The work of the third convention having been ratified by the people by an overwhelming majority at the election held on October 1, 1889, President Harrison, who as Senator had been our early advocate, issued his proclamation on November 2, 1889, formally admitting South Dakota into the Union.

"And now, for almost a third of a century, one of the stars in the flag stands for South Dakota. As you may well judge after all this history it had come to be a star of some magnitude before it found its place in the flag.

"Its population far exceeded that of each of at least 21 other States when they were admitted to the Union. The amount expended for education in South Dakota in the last fiscal year prior to her admission exceeded that of any one of 15 Southern States that opposed her admission.

"Our history has not been one of unalloyed peace. Of course we made contribution in proportion to population to the Union cause in the Civil War. But seven Indian reservations within our borders, numerous old forts along and beyond the Missouri River, bear witness to the menace of Indian depredations and warfare in the earlier days. But the forts were but the outposts of that all-conquering civilization which when once established knows no abandonment or turning back. As the men of that earlier day dared the danger of the wild men of the West who believed their hunting grounds invaded, so those who followed braved the storms and all the rigors of the prairie and great plains regions. But there was the fertile soil, and from it they soon produced a large part of the grain that went to fill the great Northwest granary of the world.

"And there are the "hills," the Black Hills, which for pure scenic beauty, if not for sublimity, are hardly eclipsed by the Rockies themselves. They have in the Homestake what is reputed to be the greatest single gold-producing mine in the world. They may well be called the golden hills.

"Such the fundamental material resources of the great new State of South Dakota out of which the genius and enterprise of her citizens are year by year bringing that infinite diversity of interests and industry and products which give assurance of continuing prosperity and progress. The day will yet come when the great river that courses through the State and along its border for a distance of 500 miles will no longer be a menace to the land along its shores, but when in the interests of commerce, of hydroelectric power, and of irrigation, it will be harnessed and controlled, all to the end that the convenience, comfort, and happiness of men may be thereby served.

"And so, in a word, we see under what conditions, ordeals, and happy auspices too, South Dakota has come from small beginnings to her present proud position in the Union of States. Her people are pioneers or the immediate descendents of pioneers. With struggle they have grown strong. And like those imbued with the spirit of the true pioneer in all the fields of human endeavor, their story is a 'story of faith and of effort and expectation and desire, and something evermore about to be'.

"They love the Union; they hold to the principles and ideals of the fathers of the Republic. From whatsoever nationality descended, they are Americans, and as such, they worship in spirit at this shrine."

MISS NORBECK UNVEILS THE STONE.

The South Dakota State stone was at this point in the proceedings unveiled by Miss Nellie Norbeck, daughter of Hon. PETER NORBECK, junior Senator from the State of South Dakota, the orchestra playing the national anthem. Miss Norbeck is a native of South Dakota, having been born at Redfield.

The stone is of native granite, with a facsimile of the great seal of the State of South Dakota carved thereon, the motto on the seal being "Under God the People Rule."

Senator STERLING, proceeding, said:

"We all regret deeply that the Governor of South Dakota can not be here to make this presentation. I read this telegram from him, however, which shows that his heart is with us to-day:

"'I keenly regret that it is not possible for me to be in Washington and personally assist in the presentation of the South Dakota native granite tablet. The occasion is not only of interest but of real significance, and the people of the State feel keenly appreciative of being able to thus have South Dakota so appropriately brought to the attention of those visiting the monument. Through you I extend our best wishes.

"'W. H. MCMASTER, Governor.'

"And now, Mr. Secretary, in the name of the governor, and on behalf of the people of South Dakota, I present, through you, to the people of the United States, this tablet as a symbol of our fundamental political ideals and aspirations, and as a tribute of our love and of our devotion to the memory of the 'Father of his Country.'"

ACCEPTANCE BY SECRETARY WEEKS.

Hon. John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, and whose department has jurisdiction over the monument, accepted the South Dakota State memorial stone with the following remarks:

"Members of the South Dakota Delegation in Congress, ladies, and gentlemen, it is a very pleasant duty to accept on behalf of the people and Government of the United States the stone which the State of South Dakota to-day places in the Washington Monument. It is altogether fitting that the great and patriotic State of South Dakota should join with the other States of the Union in being represented by a separate stone in this monument to the Father of our Country.

"With the placement of this stone there now remain but four States unrepresented in this shaft by State stones—North Dakota, Idaho, Arizona, and New Mexico. I understand that Idaho is cutting a stone and it will soon be ready for presentation. The legislature of the State of North Dakota has the matter under consideration. Arizona and New Mexico have not yet taken any action, but I hope it will not be long before every State in the Union is represented here by a native stone.

"This great obelisk was erected by a grateful people as a token of their love and respect for the man whose wisdom and courageous leadership made possible their independence, their enjoyment of the blessings of liberty, and, indeed, this great and wonderful United States of America. The Washington Monument is even more than a memorial to the imperishable memory of the founder of the Nation, for this great white shaft symbolizes the unity of 48 distinct sovereign States—an indissoluble Union—and typifies the Americanism that has made and has preserved us a nation.

"There is no obligation on any State to contribute a stone to the Washington Monument. It is a practice founded on a beautiful sentiment, and every stone thus presented is in a sense a token of love and a pledge to uphold and maintain the Union. South Dakota has contributed this splendid granite block from her quarries, and it is my honor and great pleasure to welcome the South Dakota State stone to the monument and accept it in the name of the President and the people of the United States."

"A DACOTAH ODE TO WASHINGTON," BY MRS. BONNIN.

Mrs. Gertrude Bonnin (Zitkala-Sa), a native Indian woman from the Yankton Agency, but now residing in Washington, in Indian costume, read an original prose poem entitled, "A Dacotah Ode to Washington."

THE MYSTIC CIRCLE.

Upon the prairie grass sat aged men and women, in mystic circle, their bronzed faces upturned to the stars. Through many winters their once raven hair was whitened till in the uncertain twilight on the plains it appeared luminous about their heads. White blossoming manhood, white flowering womanhood, these seven Dacotah wicarcana and winocrana held secret conclave under the night sky.

Keepers of the sacred eagle mysteries, priest and priestess of the Seven Council Fires of their people, they are sages of that other day when Indian camps vied with huge cloud shadows drifting on the playground of the prairie. To-night they have chosen from out their seven a member of the smallest fire, summoned before them a Yankton Dacotah of the young generation. The spokesman, a veritable grandfather of the federated tribes, addressed her saying: "To-morrow is the day of days. Loyal Americans will gather before a great stone shrine at the Nation's capital. South Dakotans beckon to us, the Dacotah, to join them. We accept the gracious invitation of our pale-face brothers. This is brotherhood."

As he momentarily paused, his quiet voice floated out into the eternal spaces among the stars, seemed to echo and reecho against the stillness of the night in the concave sky, "This is brotherhood!" The voice continued, "You are called as our messenger, our interpreter. Are you willing to serve?" Without hesitation the answer came, "I am." The other members of the circle, hitherto silent, responded in approval, "Be it so." "Hecetu." The spokesman said, "You have answered well. Service is the highest privilege."

Together they taught her what to say, placed an eagle plume in her hand. "With this sacred quill write word for word what we have told you here to-night," they commanded. "At dawn start upon the journey to the great stone shrine with our message." In final parting bade her, "Upon the way, keep your own heart warm with love and strong with truth. Lift up your eyes for vision."

UPON THE WAY.

Straight as an arrow flies from a strong bow, sped the Dacotah runner from the hallow'd circle of the starlit prairie. At break of day hastened with the message, speeding faster, ever faster. Upon the way were many relays, from footsore pony to stagecoach plunging over rough country roads, from coach to the iron horse gliding rapidly upon a steel track. The miraculous journey to the Nation's Capital is made in safety. All faithful to her trust, the messenger stands before the monumental shrine of Washington.

THE MESSAGE.

"The day of days is at hand. It is now." These the words from the Seven Council Fires of the Dakotah. "We sing the name of our first President. We call him Washington—Ohitika—undaunted leader of nations crying in the dark. He brought them light from the sky, taught them principles of peace and brotherhood; taught the lisping multitudes to say, 'We, the people,' counseled them 'to observe good faith and justice toward all nations.'

"The Dacotah people carol with lusty throats the memorable deeds of Washington. He scanned with eagle eye the hope of a united people and happy; beheld the vision of democratic government. He rose on powerful eagle wings, with unswerving purpose attained to lofty virtues of public service.

"A victory song we sing to the memory of Washington, who disdained kingship upon a lower realm and preferred to be a servant of the people, who by his life demonstrated only 'Right makes might.' Then over all his glorious achievements upheld our sacred emblem, the eagle, pointing to its meaning in all his noble acts.

"We venerate the memory of our great pale-face brother, Washington, the chiefest among guardians of spiritual fires—liberty and unity. Washington, thrice worthy of the decoration of the eagle plume, for he left the impress of its meaning upon the minds and hearts of all Americans.

"This is our glad song to-day. The eagle represents the conscious spirit of man, soaring into the silent upper air for meditation and spiritual communion, soaring away from the transitory turmoils of the day, into the heights, there gaining wider vision, added strength, and wisdom, there finding the secret of joyous being, unburdened from the pettiness of make-beliefs.

"Comrades of the earth, the hope of our humanity lies in the preservation of high ideals, in holding fast to these symbols and precepts bequeathed us through all ages and races of men till we have learned their innermost lesson. It is well that the sacred eagle is carved upon America's gold, lest we forget in the heat of world commerce our brotherhood upon earth. It is well that the eagle is engraved upon the buttons and insignia of our brave men, lest we forget in the wild flurry of swift locomotion and radio communication to perfect our relationships, man to man, nation to nation, with justice and mercy.

"Long live the memory of Washington, whose praises we sing this day of days!

"Long live the eagle principles he inculcated in the hearts of the people!

"Then shall come many days of peace, prosperity, and happiness!"

ADDRESS BY SENATOR NORBECK.

Senator PETER NORBECK delivered the following address:

"Mr. Chairman and South Dakota friends, we have a long and splendid program and I am sure we are all enjoying it, so I will not take up much time. There are other speakers whom we should hear and who will not be with us on some other occasion. You will have other opportunities to hear me speak.

"With the rest of the South Dakota people here assembled, I am proud and I am pleased that our State is now represented in this monument by the contribution of a memorial stone. It was quite natural that South Dakota, which is a young State and has come into the Union of late years, should be one of the later to take part in doing honor to the memory of George Washington, but it was a foregone conclusion that we would not fail to do our part. The settlement of our State is within the memory of men and women all reassembled, some of whom are among our early pioneers. Some of them came a little later, but they came on the first passenger train to arrive. They were first to settle in the villages that sprang up on the prairie.

"The history of our State is short but marvelous. While we are lacking in many things that older settled States still enjoy, none have made more progress in such a short period.

Our people are hardy pioneers, each contributing his part to the upbuilding of one of the greatest Commonwealths of the Union in the not far distant future. We have splendid people, and they have come to our State with the right spirit, the pioneer spirit, to take on the responsibility without flinching. They have come from every State in the Union and from nearly every country on the globe, but we have the best of each, the more enterprising, those who pushed on ahead of the rest.

"We are happy in this privilege that we can join in doing something to show our appreciation of the 'Father of his Country.' Great men have come forward in every crisis and they will not be lacking in the next, but George Washington stands out among them all as the greatest. Years will come and years will go. Great men will appear on the horizon, but there will probably be no one among them who fits his work as well as did Washington."

REMARKS BY CONGRESSMAN JOHNSON.

Congressman ROYAL C. JOHNSON made the following remarks:

"The State of South Dakota is proud that it may join with its sister States in doing honor to the memory of George Washington, and as this tablet is dedicated to his memory, the people of the State renew their faith in the policies enunciated by our first great President.

"No man may say how long this granite block or monument containing it may last, as no man may foretell the span of life of men or nations, but this we can foretell that as this monument of stone with strong foundation and good workmanship will exist for ages, the ideals of Washington will survive with civilization.

"The people of South Dakota who to-day honor his memory love him as a man, admire him as a soldier, and respect him as a statesman—the Father of our Country."

ADDRESS BY CONGRESSMAN CHRISTOPHERSON.

Congressman C. A. CHRISTOPHERSON made the following address at the unveiling of the South Dakota tablet in the Washington Monument, the Mall, Washington, D. C., June 21, 1922:

"Mr. Chairman and South Dakotans, we unveil to-day a tablet that represents the contribution of South Dakota to this shrine erected to the memory of George Washington, the Father of our Country.

"The funds for constructing this monument were raised by voluntary subscriptions of 1 cent from the school children of the country; a vast undertaking consummated under a plan beautifully conceived which permitted each and every one to share in the honor. It is one of the most conspicuous monuments in the world and is about the first object that attracts the attention of the visitor when he comes to the Capital City and the last he sees when he leaves.

"The first time I wended my way down to this monument, walked up the stairway and saw the numerous tablets placed there by other States, I was struck by the thought that surely South Dakota should be represented. This absence of South Dakota has been commented on by many visitors from our State, and I am glad that from now on we will not be among the missing.

"It is only right and proper that South Dakota, surpassed by no State in the Union, should be represented in this shrine. Our State, once a part of the Louisiana Purchase and only 33 years old, is nevertheless one of the leading States in the Union. Its varied surface and physical characteristics are responsible for the diversity of the opportunities which have brought such satisfactory returns to the pioneers who have taken the brunt in its development.

"We are located in the Corn Belt, and South Dakota is rightfully named the Sunshine State. We have vast areas of broad valleys and rolling prairie lands, unsurpassed in the richness and fertility of the soil, where a diversity of crops may be raised and the yield is abundant, and that is the principal reason why South Dakota for many years has led all the States of the Union in the per capita production of new wealth.

"We of South Dakota, keen as we are in business and industry, also have a love for the beautiful, and are proud of the fact that our State can be classed with those having exquisite mountain scenery. This is embraced in the Black Hills, a misnomer, as they are mountains in every sense, long described as the 'richest hundred square miles on earth,' and where is located the Homestake mine, which for many years was the largest single gold-producing mine in the world. In the Black Hills we have the highest mountains between the Rockies and the Himalayas. In Spearfish Canyon we have a Royal Gorge, and in the southern part are located Sylvan Lake, Wind Cave, and Hot Springs, not to mention other numerous points of interest that are yearly attracting more and more tourists to our State.

"In the eastern part of the State we are blessed with many lakes and rivers which are being used more extensively each year for camping and fishing, and it is therefore not necessary for any of our residents to leave the State in order to satisfy the most critical in the matter of opportunities for vacation trips that will benefit both mind and body. Nor is anyone deprived of this privilege, for the opportunities are so numerous and near at hand that the most lowly can avail themselves of their enjoyment at little expense.

"While we are not so great in number, we yield to none in quality, in loyalty, industry, thrift, and progress. Every day and year sees improvements in our highways; constantly our schools and churches are being improved, and in every way we are striving to attain the high ideal that has ever been our goal.

"We are, indeed, a forward-looking people, as is clearly expressed in the progressive and advanced legislation on our statute books. We have been the leader among States in enacting laws for the benefit of all our citizens and in the interest of their advancement. This is true for the reason that our people have always taken an interest in the political government of our State. Indeed, the people of our State have governed it and have at all times maintained complete control, so that the policy followed has been the one that seemed best to them in the light of their experience. Thus we can proudly say we have lived up to our State motto, 'Under God the people rule.'

"However, the interest of our people is not confined to the State; we are not clannish or provincial but hospitable and friendly, and keep abreast with the progress of the Nation, always striving to better conditions in our country. We have always taken a keen interest in the life and work of the men who have been leaders in our Nation, those upon whose shoulders have been placed the great responsibilities, and of those the work of none lies closer to our hearts than that of George Washington. We have always admired his patriotism, patience, courage, and unselfishness, and we have, individually and collectively, sought to emulate these noble characteristics. We have rejoiced in the fact that our country has constantly been moving forward and always toward that ideal in government that was the goal when our Government was established.

"South Dakota, always modest, is rapidly attaining her rightful place as one of the leading States of the Union, and it is therefore also right, fitting, and proper that among the forward steps we should place in this monument a tablet, hewn from native green granite, as a visible testimonial of the honor and respect in which we hold the Father of our Country."

ADDRESS BY CONGRESSMAN WILLIAMSON.

Congressman WILLIAM WILLIAMSON delivered the following address:

"Ever since the human race developed sufficient capacity to realize that life on this earth is but an evanescent dream that vanishes like a fleeting cloud into the mists of eternity man has sought to invent some means of perpetuating the memory of his life and work. Long before he learned to record his deeds in manuscript or book he erected huge monuments to commemorate the illustrious dead or to satisfy the vanity of the living.

"This seems to be an inborn trait of the human mind, a melancholy reminder of the brevity of our common existence, and one of the most powerful forces in causing men to contemplate a hereafter. Intelligence abhors oblivion; activity rebels at eternal sleep; and reasoning rejects endless incapacity for achievement.

"So we, too, are joining the ranks of those who through the centuries have struggled to leave some reminder that they have lived. Happily, we are not placing this green granite slab that the names of those who are here may be remembered but that the countless pilgrims who through the years shall climb these stairs may be reminded of that glorious State whose representatives we are.

"In a special sense we are here to rededicate that State to those principles of civil and religious liberty which have come to be recognized as the essential groundwork of a republican form of government and to renew our pledge of loyalty and support to the end that we may hand them down to posterity in all their pristine vigor. It is particularly fitting that this memorial stone should be set and that these ceremonies should be had in this great shaft erected in the honor of him who was 'first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.' May the ideals for which he stood and the example of his life ever serve as an inspiration to those who love liberty and justice everywhere.

"We who are here to-day are among South Dakota's pioneers. While we have experienced the hardships incident to that kind of life, we have also enjoyed its inestimable privileges and inspiration. It is a wonderful thing to be permitted to be among those who have helped shape the destinies of a new State. How well we have wrought only those who come after may fittingly judge. But we have lived long enough to see our State develop from small beginnings into one of the most enterprising and progressive of all the States. In the rich fertility of its soil, the healthfulness of its climate, and the variety and wealth of its production it has, indeed, few, if any, equals. For many years it has stood first among all the States in the per capita production of new wealth. Here the energetic young man, no matter what the bent of his mind or the line of his activity, may find a fitting home.

"Nor has nature failed to be lavish with all that is wonderful and beautiful. No one who has ever climbed to the crest of the great Bad Lands and cast his vision over that wilderness of ridges, canyons, minarets, and towers but has stood in awe and silence. As he proceeds he finds much of the grotesque but also much that has been finely chiseled by nature's hand. The vast desolation stretches out on every hand in a bewildering chaos that defies description. Withal, it is fascinating and has an appeal that causes thousands to return again and again only to have their wonderment and amazement increase. Here lies buried the remains of countless monsters of ages gone, hundreds of whose bones now grace the museums of the world. Here, indeed, is a monument of the past whose ever unfolding pages offer unrivaled opportunities for the student of the flora and fauna that thrived a million years ago. Here is written the history of the activities of the Creator of the universe long before man made his advent upon this terrestrial sphere. Only recently bills have been introduced in both Houses of Congress to make this extraordinary region one of our great national parks. It has been most appropriately named the 'Wonderland.'

"Beyond this lies a rising plain, well watered by numerous streams that have their origin in the Black Hills, the highest region in the continental United States east of the Rockies. For sheer loveliness and scenic beauty these mountains are not surpassed by anything to be found in America. Here the hardiest climber can scale the heights to his heart's content, the angler can fill his basket with the spotted trout from numerous sparkling streams, and the tired business man can find rest in numberless secluded nooks. Not only has nature provided towering peaks, deep canyons, and vast underground caverns, but lakes, cascades, and waterfalls add charm to the splendidly wooded landscapes. To all this she has added bubbling fountains of healing waters, that he who enters may take up his bed and walk. Buffalo, elk, deer, and other wild-animal life abound. It is one of nature's playgrounds. Hither the weary may wend their way from summer's heat and seek surcease from grinding toil. To these mountains in increasing numbers they will continue to come in quest of health, recreation, and pleasure. To all we extend a hearty welcome, and bid them bathe in her limpid pools and breathe the pine-scented breezes that the old may have their youth renewed like the eagle's and that the young may never taste of the weariness of years."

ADDRESS BY JUDGE CARLAND.

Hon. John E. Carland, formerly United States district judge for South Dakota and now United States circuit judge, delivered the following address:

"Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, citizens of South Dakota, I had not expected to make any remarks on this occasion, but when your chairman suggested that I say something, taking into consideration the object of this meeting, I could not resist the opportunity to rejoice with other citizens of South Dakota in celebrating the unveiling of the tablet which is upon the walls of this great monument to George Washington.

"It was 45 years ago next August that I had to go from St. Paul to what was then called Northern Pacific Junction, near Duluth, to get a train west. A passenger train ran from that point to Fargo. From there a mixed passenger and freight train ran to Bismarck, Dakota Territory. As that was the end of the railroad, I stopped there—not because it was the end of the road, but because I thought it was a good place to stop.

"The territory within the boundaries of the present State of North Dakota was then practically the third judicial district of the Territory of Dakota, and the judge of that district lived at Fargo, so that I was compelled, if I wanted to get the ear of the court, to go 200 miles, from Bismarck to Fargo. Some people now claim that the ear of the court is sometimes farther off than that, but in the sense they mean they are undoubtedly mistaken.

"I rejoice in taking part in these ceremonies, because all my professional life has been spent in either the practice of the law or upon the bench, in either the Territory of Dakota or South Dakota, until I was appointed judge at large, to be sent anywhere the Chief Justice of the United States chose to send me. I am very thankful, however, that he never sent me to any other place than the eighth circuit, which includes South Dakota.

"In thus being engaged in the practice of the law and in an honest endeavor, so far as I was able, to administer justice, my attention has been called frequently to the institutions of this country and the fundamental principles of the Constitution and those other principles which underlie, support, and make stable and successful the affairs of this Nation.

"I think it is well that these meetings have for their object the calling of the citizens together to look back upon the heroes and statesmen who founded this Government. To observe what they did and what they thought is very beneficial, and I think the more we have of these meetings the better, especially in this day and age, when we read in the papers the advocacy of the proposition that the manner of amending the Constitution ought to be made easier; that it is all wrong and must be changed. I hope that citizens who attend a meeting of this kind will have their minds turned to those fundamental principles of this Government which can not be amended, and at the same time preserve liberty regulated by law. I believe in progress; we all, I hope, believe in progress, and there must be progress; we can not stand still. The liberty of the individual, the rights of humanity, the alleviation of suffering must be looked after, but it is not necessary to abolish the fundamental principles established by the fathers of the country in order to do this. It can be done by peaceful, lawful, regular methods prescribed by law. Liberty without law, or without regulation, means a mere license to do as one pleases, which is destructive of all rights, civil and political.

"I do not wish to oppose or criticize the right of any honest-minded citizen from advocating principles which he thinks will benefit humanity, but if I may venture a word of advice to any citizen engaged in the making of laws, it is that attempts to change fundamental principles ought to be approached with the utmost carefulness and consideration. In connection with these exercises it may be well to remember that—

"'In a free republic, where all men exercise political power, the prevalence of correct views and principles on political subjects is essential to the safety of the State. It is not enough that their truth should be recognized. Their operation and tendency must be understood and appreciated; they must be made familiar to the mass of the people, become closely interwoven with their whole habits of thought and feeling, objects of attachment to which they may cling instantly and instinctively in all time of doubt or peril, so as not to be swept away by any sudden flood or prejudice or passion. Hence, it is the duty of every man to embrace all fit occasions, nay, to seek fit occasions, for declaring his adherence to such principles and giving them the support of his influence, however high or however humble that influence may be.'"

ADDRESS BY HON. O. S. BASFORD.

Hon. O. S. Basford, a pioneer in South Dakota, delivered the following address:

"Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, let me first express to the committee my appreciation of the honor conferred by asking me to occupy a few minutes on an occasion which will mark an important date in the history of the State of our birth or adoption. We may not be responsible for place of birth, but the choice is ours when in adult age we select a place for a future home.

"Some of you, I know, were born in South Dakota; others, perhaps the majority, chose the State of South Dakota in which to make permanent residence. Such as so chose never have shown better judgment.

"It could not have been my reputation as an orator that secured to me the invitation to speak, but it may have been the fact that my selection of the State for a home dates back among the early settlers.

"The greatness of our United States from every viewpoint has been forced on our attention by the rapid and thrilling events of the past seven years. No period in our history has so strikingly revealed ourselves to ourselves and revealed all other nations to our view. As on a panoramic canvas these years have moved before us, and no historic pen will be able to paint the events for our posterity as they have appeared to us.

"When the first call came for the Nation to buy six billions of bonds and pay spot cash we were startled and asked, 'How can it be done?' Quickly we went over the top, and again and again we repeated ourselves until over twenty-four billions had been poured into our National Treasury.

"Had necessity demanded, we could have continued the flood, though perhaps in lessening volume.

"How gathered we such wealth?

"Speaking for the West, I can help to answer that question.

"In May, 1880, 42 years ago, I first visited South Dakota, then a part of Dakota Territory. It was possible then to go by rail only to Watertown. With horse and buggy I drove 70 miles west to the James River, in Spink County. There I learned that the county had been organized the previous year, that about 200 claims of 160 acres each of Government land had been filed upon, that 150 acres of the approximately 1,000,000 acres of prairie land in the county had been plowed. The nearest railroad to the present county seat—Redfield—was 70 miles away. In the fall of 1887, only seven years later, there were 150 miles of railroad in the county.

"Your speaker bought grain at the county seat in the fall of 1887, and, with the assistance of an auditor of a line of grain elevators, we estimated that 6,000,000 bushels of small grain was shipped from the county to eastern markets from the crop of 1886. Similar developments were in progress throughout the larger part of the region which now constitutes the State of South Dakota.

"It is therefore not startling to know that the year our State was received into the Union, 1889, we gained the distinction of producing more new wealth per capita per annum than any other State in the Union. That record we have maintained up to the present time.

"We were not long past our age of majority as a State when the first call to buy Government bonds for the World War was made. In responding to the several calls our State purchased an aggregate of $110,000,000 of bonds, although our total population as a State did not exceed 650,000 people, the large majority being actual dirt farmers.

"English history is replete with well-deserved encomiums on the accomplishments of the Anglo-Saxon race. Did you ever search for the reason why that name was applied to the people of England?

"The earliest known races of the English Isles were the Britons, Gaels, and Picts. Centuries ago there dwelt in Germany two tribes near the south shore of the North Sea. They invaded England, conquered its people, settled its lands, and mingled with its inhabitants. That their name became attached to the English people as a racial name is a credit to the Germanic race.

"In English literature there is also much said of the beneficial effects on English language, habits, and character by the Norman conquest.

"Who was William the Conqueror, Duke of Normandy? He was the grandson of Rolla, foremost among the Scandinavian sea kings or rovers.

"In recent extensive travel and business transactions with the successful farmers of South Dakota I found Finlanders, Hollanders, Germans, Scandinavians, Irish, Scotch—indeed every European race seemed to be with us as well as a sprinkling from Asia. These races are intermarrying, and in the second and third generations race pride and prejudice are disappearing and a new race is becoming common.

"If there was sense and justice in giving to English people the racial title of Anglo-Saxon, greater sense would be shown in giving to this new race the name American. To the south are Mexicans and to the north Canadians. Let the people of this United States be known as Americans. So far as the people of South Dakota are choosers, Americans we are and Americans we will remain and of the 100 per cent variety.

"It is a pleasure to see among the emblems of our sister States the seal of South Dakota. Using a figure of speech borrowed from Holy Writ, 'As a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings,' so here has come one of the latest hatched of the brood to be sheltered among the others by these rock walls, placed here in memory of George Washington, father not only of the thirteen original States, but father of all States ever carved out of the territory of our free and mighty Republic."

As presiding officer, Senator STERLING made the following remarks in closing:

"Before the concluding number by the Army Music School band I want to express our appreciation for the presence here to-day of Secretary Weeks to accept our memorial on behalf of the Government. I also wish to express our hearty thanks to Col. Clarence O. Sherrill, commissioner of public buildings and grounds, and engineer in charge of the Washington Monument, for his assistance and that of his aides in arranging for this dedication; also to Mr. Frederick L. Harvey, secretary of the Washington National Monument Society, for the work that he has done in helping to make this dedication a success. And finally I want to express our appreciation of the excellent music that has been furnished by the Army Music School band."

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 9053. An act to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 9270. An act to confer upon the Territorial courts of Porto Rico concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts of that district of all offenses under the national prohibition act and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

H. R. 10144. An act conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public park purposes; and

H. R. 11492. An act providing for the transfer or sale of Army and Navy equipment to the Boy Scouts of America; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry, to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 11901) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River to connect the city of Benwood, W. Va., and the city of Bellaire, Ohio, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back the bill favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, to and into the city of Benwood, Union District, county of Marshall, in the State of West Virginia, from the central part of the city of Bellaire, county of Belmont, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIVELES MILITARY RESERVATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 23) authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles quarry within the limits of a United States military reservation in the Philippine Islands and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto, provided military necessities permit, which were to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant revocable licenses for the quarrying and removal of stone from the Mariveles Military Reservation, P. I., to the Government of the Philippine Islands and to persons and corporations in the Philippine Islands upon such terms and conditions as may be fixed by the Secretary of War.

And to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the quarrying and removal of stone from the Mariveles Military Reservation, P. I."

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL FOREST IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. LENROOT, Mr. STANFIELD, and Mr. WALSH of Montana conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPEALS ON WRITS OF ERROR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3618) to amend section 135 of the Judicial Code, which were on page 1, line 3, to strike out "section 135 of"; on page 1, line 4, to strike out "at the end thereof the following paragraph:" and insert: "thereto a new section to be known as section 238 (a)."; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend the Judicial Code, in reference to appeals and writs of error."

Mr. REED of Missouri. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ANCHORAGE GROUNDS IN UNITED STATES WATERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2199) to provide for the marking of anchorage grounds in waters of the United States, which was on page 1, line 9, to strike out "law", and insert: "the laws of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the House be concurred in. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is concurred in.

PAYMENTS FOR INTERNAL-REVENUE STAMPS DESTROYED.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1988) for the relief of Faxon, Horton & Gallagher; Long Bros. Grocery Co.; A. Rieger; Rothenberg & Schloss; Ryley, Wilson & Co.; and Van Noy News Co.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Faxon, Horton & Gallagher the sum of $888, to Long Bros. Grocery Co. the sum of $197, to A. Rieger the sum of $327, to Rothenberg & Schloss the sum of $441, to Ryley, Wilson & Co. the sum of $466, and to Van Noy News Co. the sum of $866; said sums being in full payment of the value of United States internal-revenue stamps destroyed by flood, as shown by investigation by the collector of internal revenue and by the findings of the Court of Claims, reported in Senate Document No. 642, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate adjourn until Tuesday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Tuesday, September 5, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, September 5, 1922.

The Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Most gracious God, it is good to give thanks unto Thee and to praise Thy Name, O Most High; to show forth Thy loving kindness in the morning, and Thy faithfulness every night. We thank Thee for the night of rest and sleep and protection. We thank Thee for the day with its light and life and promise. Guide us through this day with Thy loving providence. Make us grateful for Thy blessings. Help us to recognize Thy presence and Thy power.

Especially do we pray for Thy blessing upon the United States Senate. Protect them. Give Thine angels charge over them, and guard their lives, their health, and strength in the special burdensome duties and exposures of these days. Be near to any that are sick, or in any way burdened in body, in mind, or in estate, and comfort and speedily relieve them.

And now bless the United States Senate in lawful assemblage, and send to them the Holy Spirit of Thy wisdom and grace. Keep them from unwise council and disorder and mistakes, and so give them Thy presence and power that their legislation may be the establishment of peace and happiness, of truth and justice, of virtue and piety. To the whole land reveal Thyself in Thy great tenderness. Over the tumults of the people rule Thou, and out of all confusion bring order and fraternity and brotherhood. To the glory of Thy Name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	du Pont	New	Smoot
Borah	Ernst	Nicholson	Sterling
Brandegee	Gooding	Oddie	Sutherland
Broussard	Harreld	Phipps	Underwood
Bursum	Heflin	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Rawson	Walsh, Mont.
Culberson	Kellogg	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Cummins	Lenroot	Robinson	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson, Ind.
Dial	McNary	Simmons
Dillingham	Nelson	Smith

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Fletcher McLean

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Myers	Shields	Stanfield	Williams
Reed, Mo.	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask consent of the Senate to interrupt the regular order of procedure for just a moment. I am obliged to leave the Chamber and leave the city in a few minutes. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted at this time to submit an amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa to House bill 12472.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent, out of order, to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, submitted on behalf of the committee, to House bill 12472.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator want it acted on at this time?

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; I want to speak on it for about 5 or 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator desires to speak on the amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like very much to have this amendment acted upon if it is not disagreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill. A brief word of explanation is due the Senate, of course; and I should be very glad if I could have the attention of the Senate for a moment.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, may the amendment be read now, so that we may know what it is?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will state what is in it, and the phraseology can be read afterwards.

The amendment which I have offered simply provides that there shall be added to the bill offered by the Senator from Iowa as a substitute for the House bill a section to be known as section 7; and section 7 provides that all producers of coal for shipment in interstate commerce shall, every 15 days, report to the Secretary of Commerce the prices they have received for their coal at the mine, and that all wholesalers and jobbers engaged in handling coal in interstate commerce shall in like manner report the prices they have charged for coal. The object of the amendment is to advise the purchasing public what prices are being charged. It will enable the purchasing public to know first what the general and average price of coal is, and to judge whether the purchaser is being charged an unreasonable price. It will enable the purchaser of coal to compare the prices charged by different mines. If the ordinary price is, let us say, $4 a ton, if some mine owner is charging $8 or $10 a ton, the fact will immediately become known to the purchaser that he is being robbed and cheated, and he will know that he should not buy from that man, and the profiteer and his practices will be exposed.

All that I have said applies equally to the wholesaler. If, then, a purchaser of coal in a community for household use finds that a certain price is fixed by his retail dealer, and there is any combination or any extortion practiced, he can discover that fact by simply referring to the price at the mine and the price the wholesalers are charging and adding to the price the amount of the railroad charges, which are easily ascertained.

I do not claim that this amendment will afford a complete remedy for our ills. It will, however, give to the general public valuable information, and it will result in exposing the unjust practices of a part of the dealers in coal, those who do indulge in unjust practices, and at the same time will serve to vindicate from the charge of extortion every dealer who is charging only fair and reasonable prices. It does not undertake to regulate prices, but it disseminates information regarding prices.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not hear the statement of the substance of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. Is it confined to coal transported in interstate commerce?

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is the first impression I had; but just then the Senator stated that it referred to the prices of coal as sold by the operators at the mines.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The prices charged by operators for coal to be shipped in interstate commerce.

Mr. SHIELDS. Let us stop right there. What jurisdiction have we over coal to be sold in interstate commerce before it goes into interstate commerce? Does not that come directly within the decision in the case of the child-labor law?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think not. This is a mere matter of information. A man is engaged in producing an article to be shipped in interstate commerce. We do not regulate his price. We simply ask him to report his price.

Mr. SHIELDS. What power have we to require him to report about a matter that Congress has no jurisdiction to regulate?

Mr. REED of Missouri. But I think the Senator will agree with me on reflection that when an article is produced for the express purpose of shipment in interstate commerce the production is the first step in the interstate-commerce transaction. We could not compel the producer to report his prices, and I do not seek to compel him to report his prices, on any coal except that which he disposes of for shipment in interstate commerce; and, in fact, great bodies of it are sold by the mine owners directly into interstate commerce. That is all I am seeking to reach. I am trying to keep squarely within the limits of the Federal authority.

Mr. President, this gives the people a chance to a degree, at least, to protect themselves from extortion. It exposes extortion and exposes profiteering. It is a thing that can be easily done, because in the past substantially the same thing has been done, so far as collecting information is concerned; but the dissemination of it, I believe, never has been undertaken. It is one practical step that I think we can take within the limits of our constitutional authority. It imposes no unjust burden upon anyone. It does not interfere with freedom of trade or commerce, except to the extent that the dissemination of facts may interfere with some individual's desire to practice extortion. Moreover, it is justifiable for another reason: It enables the purchaser to know the sources from which he can obtain his supply.

I can illustrate that. A few days ago a large consumer of coal wired me that he was being required to pay as high as $12 a ton for bituminous coal to be used in manufacturing establishments. The next day I received a telegram from a large coal producer saying that there were then 500 cars upon the tracks in Missouri and Kansas without a purchaser, and that the coal was held at $4.50 to $6 a ton. If that fact had been generally known, nobody would have been buying $12 coal on that day.

I am sorry I can not be here to present this amendment. If it is entirely agreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill, and he will get consent to lay his bill before the Senate, I should like to offer the amendment; but perhaps Senators would like to discuss it further.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is wholly agreeable to me to have the bill laid before the Senate. I intended to ask to have that done immediately after the disposition of the routine morning business.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there are some of us who would like to dispose of the morning business first.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then, Mr. President, I thank the Senate for the courtesy they have extended me, and I shall have to leave this matter in charge of some other Senator.

Mr. SMITH. Can not the Senator from Missouri introduce his amendment by unanimous consent?

Mr. REED of Missouri. It has been introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been introduced, and it will be ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

CONFIRMATION OF ASSOCIATE JUSTICE GEORGE SUTHERLAND.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the President has sent in the nomination of Mr. George Sutherland as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in place of Associate Justice Clarke, who has resigned. According to the usual custom in a case where the appointee has served in this body as long as Mr. Sutherland did, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination may be taken up and disposed of as in open executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. As in open executive session, the Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate George Sutherland, of Utah, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, vice John H. Clarke, resigned.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 5, 1922.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the nomination be confirmed without reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will report the nomination.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. George Sutherland, of Utah, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination? [Putting the question.] The nomination is confirmed unanimously, and the President will be notified.

TREATY WITH PANAMA (S. DOC. NO. 248).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Acting Secretary of State, setting forth the desirability of terminating the present treaty arrangement with Panama and the negotiation of a new treaty with that Government, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 243) providing for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 904) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 2625) for the relief of sufferers in New Mexico from the flood due to the overflow of the Rio Grande and its tributaries, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3193) to provide for the refund of penalties paid under section 4 of the food control act, as amended, reported adversely thereon and moved that the bill be indefinitely postponed, which was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that September 2, 1922, they presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 813. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets NW.; and

S. 2597. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 3790) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., for the disposal of the surplus waters of Milk River, Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks, not needed by the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation for domestic or irrigation purposes, and I submit a report (No. 903) thereon. Being a matter of some urgency, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into agreement, jointly or separately, with the Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., for the sale of the surplus waters of Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks, not needed by the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation, Mont., for domestic or irrigation purposes, upon such terms and conditions and under such rules and regulations as may be deemed for the best interests of the Indians: Provided, That said districts shall furnish in advance the entire cost to be incurred in determining the amount of the surplus water of said streams over and above the amount needed for the Indians. The districts shall furnish their respective proportionate share of such cost. Any differences as to the cost of such investigation shall be properly adjusted at a later date.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I offer the following amendment to the amendment: After the word "authorized" where it occurs in the third line of the typewritten substitute insert "by the advice and with the consent of the Business Council of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with the Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district of Cut Bank, Mont., for the disposal of the waters of Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks, not needed for domestic or irrigation purposes by the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PHIPPS (by request):

A bill (S. 3982) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue oil and gas permits and leases to persons equitably entitled thereto, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 3983) to extend the market news service of the Department of Agriculture by telegraph to the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Florida; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY LAWS.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12472, the emergency coal bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like very much if we could go on with the calendar until 2 o'clock. There are quite a number of bills on the calendar, and it is very important that we should go on with it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest that we take up the calendar where we left off at the last call of the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that be the desire of the Senate, I shall not even attempt to stand in the way. Everyone knows the emergency of the particular bill which I have called up.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest to the Senator from Florida that he let the matter go over for the present. If we do not take the calendar up to-day, I shall try to arrange later in the week to devote an entire day to the calendar, so that we can clean it up.

Mr. FLETCHER. If that can be arranged, I will not press the matter.

Mr. CURTIS. I will try to arrange for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FLETCHER. I make no objection, with that understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and House bill 12472 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

THE COTTON INDUSTRY.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I deem it to be my duty, in view of certain statements made by the Agricultural Department, to call to the attention of the Senate what I consider the greatest menace which now confronts our industrial life. Of course, it is a matter which has not challenged the attention of the whole people, because they were not apprised of certain facts.

Just a few days ago we passed a tariff bill, and one of the most important provisions in that bill as it pertained to America, as well as the rest of the world, was that relating to cotton manufactures. It is a matter not only of concern to America, where there are money investments in cotton-manufacturing plants of almost incalculable sums, but it is a matter of world-wide interest, that there has appeared and is now operating in this country a destructive pest which last year spread its infestation to practically the entire Cotton Belt. I want to read a report of the estimate of loss made by the Department of Agriculture, which is nothing short of startling in its revelations concerning the amount of loss we are now sustaining. This report, in part, says:

> From point of loss in production through all causes, 1921 was a record year. The estimated potential production aggregates 18,666,000 bales, prevented production being 10,712,000 bales, for which the boll weevil was responsible for 6,277,000 bales in one year alone.

When we consider that the average export of cotton for 10 years was 7,456,000, and our domestic consumption was 6,396,000 bales, we can begin to appreciate the actual loss in dollars and cents yearly from the presence of this pest. The article further reads:

> Prevented production therefore far exceeded the actual crop and the weevil caused a reduction equal to 79 per cent of the actual crop. Had it not been for the weevil last year's crop could have been obtained from 66 per cent of the acreage cultivated. The weevil was more destructive than all other causes of damage combined, being credited with 59 per cent of the total damage.

Mr. President, I had a talk this morning over the telephone with the chief entomologist of the Department of Agriculture. The presence of this pest is menacing the commercial life of the South Atlantic States. In my State alone last year practically 1,000,000 bales of cotton were taken from production. At $100 a bale, or 20 cents a pound, that spelled a loss of $100,000,000 in that State alone.

We have been experimenting with this terrible plague for something like 21 years, and have not even checked his ravages. We have come to the point where heroic remedies must be applied if we propose to save for the mills of America, to say nothing of the mills of the world, a supply of cotton sufficient to meet the demands of those mills.

It is needless for me to say to the Senate that American cotton has no competitor, and is practically the only cotton used for human consumption the world over, and from an average of 13,000,000 bales in the last 10 years, the production during the years 1921 and 1922 will not exceed 8,000,000 bales, and the weevil has not yet quite covered the entire cotton belt.

As the chief entomologist said to me this morning, it is not a local matter; it has now become a national menace, and we have to meet it, not with experiments here or rotation of crops there but with the only method indicated, the cessation of the planting of cotton for one year, either in the entire belt or in the eastern half of it, with a like cessation in the western half next year.

I asked this morning if it was the opinion of the chief entomologist that cotton was the only host of this pest. He replied that, so far as their investigations went, he was of that opinion. I asked him to write me a letter setting forth whether or not, in the opinion of the entomologist, the cessation of the planting of cotton a year would put the pest beyond the Rio Grande River, in which case we could zone a hundred miles east of the river, and forever remove the danger of this incalculable loss that has fallen upon the southern people.

It is claimed that the price of cotton, now 20 to 22 cents a pound, is higher than it was during pre-war times. When it is taken into consideration that we produce one bale now where we produced two then, that we are fighting the weevil, picking off the square, adding the fertilizer, and then making one bale where we made two, the cost on the south Atlantic this year will aggregate from three to four times the cost before the weevil occurred. I predict that unless heroic measures are adopted such as I have indicated and such as the South is now aroused to the necessity of, that in the course of three or four years there will be no cotton planted in the South Atlantic States for the reason that at the prices now obtaining the producer can not fight the weevil, buy fertilizer, and take a gambler's chance as to what he will get for his cotton. The current prices now are around 22 or 23 cents, while the estimated yield has been reduced 1,000,000 bales, according to the last Government report, to 10,500,000 bales, where the average consumption of the world is around 13,500,000 or 14,000,000 bales, spell a shortage and famine in cotton before next August shall arrive. The present price spells the absolute bankruptcy of those who are attempting to make the cotton and yet under the manipulation of our financial affairs, the price seems to be arbitrarily controlled by those who have no regard for the law of supply and demand or the welfare of the producer. We are confronted with a condition that is not only going to spell disaster to the cotton producers of the South, but, as Sir Charles McCara said in his letter to one of the officials of the American Cotton Association, it spells disaster and ruin to the cotton industry of England and of Europe and of the Orient. Japan, Great Britain, France, Italy, Spain, Germany, all run their mills dependent upon the American supply.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. On yesterday I had a call from the president of the National Farmers' Union, who had just returned to this city after a trip through Florida and Georgia. Naturally, I asked him about conditions in my own State of Georgia, which, as the Senator from South Carolina well knows, has been next to Texas the largest producer of cotton in the Union. Mr. Barrett told me of one county in which more than half the farms had been sold this year under the sheriff's hammer. The houses were abandoned. The folks and the animals were gone. From the train windows could be seen field after field where the farmer had given up hope and left his crop to the boll weevil. That is true all over the State of Georgia. The newspapers will not play it up, because they pursue the mistaken policy of optimism instead of giving the people the facts.

In my own case, if I may be permitted a personal allusion, I invested in cotton lands the savings of a quarter of a century at the bar and felt assured of a comfortable income for my old age. A report sent to me at my request by the manager of those farms last week said that I might get 60 bales where I had been getting from 500 to 600 bales. With 60 bales it will be impossible to pay the taxes and the expenses. My case is simply typical of 10,000.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the thing that I desire to call to the attention of the Senate is that we tax the patience and energy of this body to protect the manufacturers of cotton in making a profit, to practically embargo them against the menace of competition from the Old World, and yet we have done practically nothing at all to check the inroads of this foreign enemy, deadly in its effect upon the production of cotton, and we have done nothing whatever to see that those who produce this great American monopoly for 900,000,000 people shall get an adequate return for that which they produce.

I want to call attention to just one other startling statement made in the report from the Department of Agriculture:

> The hypothetical value of the prevented production of cotton brought the extraordinary total of $11,473,599,000. Of that amount the boll weevil amounted to $3,102,152,000. The farm value of cotton, including seed produced, in these 13 years aggregated $15,646,523,000, or an average of $1,203,578,700.

I am calling this matter to the attention of the Senate because it has got to be met by cooperation of the United States and the States. We have got to prepare to meet it. If the report of the entomologists be true, that cotton is the only host of this pest and that he will starve and be exterminated if cotton is not planted, we have got to meet the issue and start by leaving all east of the Mississippi for one year and then the next year all west of the Mississippi without the planting of cotton. It is absolute folly to think that the planters of the South can go on making cotton for the world's consumption, taking chances against the pest which, in unusually favorable years for him, destroys from six million to seven million bales and even in the best years cutting down the crop 30 per cent—it is idle to think that any sensible men are going to engage in the production of an article that is not only problematical even under the best of conditions, but absolutely bankrupting when it comes to the question of the added fight by virtue of this pest.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I hope my friend from South Carolina will explain to the Senate, so the country may know, that in the South it is impossible for us to adopt any money crop in the place of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. That is true. In the South Atlantic States all the land, in spite of its wonderful productivity when artificially fertilized, makes the cost of any other crop prohibitive in competition with the great grain fields of the West. There all the grain grows without artificial fertilization. Corn is raised in all the valleys of the West, the Middle West, and the far West, in such quantities and at such a cost as to make it absolutely impossible for us to grow it in competition. And yet there is not a spot on the habitable globe found that will grow a pound of cotton comparable to the American variety. We have, as Sir Charles McCara said, adopted the stupid policy of allowing Europe and America to put the price on cotton just as low as the poor, resourceless producers of the South can stand. For 50 years, as the Senator from Georgia knows, we have been producing cotton in adequate supply for the world demand at a result to us of just a bare living for those who produced it. The purchaser of cotton in America and in Europe has adopted the stupid policy of trimming the price down just as low as the producer could possibly exist—not live, but exist. So that to-day we are confronted with the condition of one-half of a crop at four times the cost with the average price of normal times. We have two resources. If the Government and the States do not take hold of this matter and finance it the production of cotton in America, so far as the world supply is concerned, is a thing of the past. It means the exploitation of every acre in the world outside of America that can grow any cotton to meet the demands of the world.

When this letter shall come from the entomologist which I have asked him to write I hope it will state specifically and indicate to us whether the nonplanting of cotton for a year would mean the eradication of the weevil. Over the telephone this morning he indicated to me that he believed that would be true. If it is true the Federal Government in conjunction with the State governments must meet the matter by law and prohibit the planting of cotton until such time as this national menace shall have been destroyed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. KING. The picture painted by the Senator is one which is very tragic. I have been wondering, as he has been explaining the matter in such a clear way, whether all of our scientific knowledge was unavailing to meet the situation.

Mr. SMITH. Absolutely unavailing, Mr. President, on account of the peculiar character of the particular insect. He does not eat. He sucks his food or his pabulum through a proboscis, so that any application of poison to the plant does not affect him, does not reach him, because he lives upon the circulation of the plant and not upon the foliage or any of its fruit. It is a peculiar thing, as developed in the South Atlantic States, that makes him a more terrible menace than in the Western States and the Mississippi Valley. In the Western States and the Mississippi Valley, where they do not have to use artificial fertilization, the soil keeps the vitality of the plant until the frost destroys it, so that he takes the blooms and shapes, as they are called. The weevil prefers those to the boll. Down in the South Atlantic, where we artificially fertilize, we produce more when the weevil is not there than they do in the West because the plant gets the proper food in the concentrated form, rapidly matures the boll, and we make more to the acre than where the plant has such a luxuriant vegetable growth. But when the fertilizer is exhausted and the full crop is practically on the stalk, it stops fruiting, but it stops fruiting before the frost falls. Consequently this pest, having no bloom or shapes, is bound to feed and he punctures practically every boll on the stalk. Those bolls in which the lint and seed are so immature as to form a liquid in which the larvæ may develop, are destroyed, and only those bolls are left where the fiber is so near to maturity that it does not furnish food for the egg and the larvæ; so that one walking through the field and seeing the cotton stalks covered with bolls thinks, perhaps, that he will make from one-third to one-half a crop, when by an examination of the bolls or waiting until they arrive at the age when bolls open he will find that, perhaps, 50 per cent of the bolls have been destroyed by this pest.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the senior Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. My colleague speaks of the Mississippi River being the dividing line. Is there any particular virtue in that being the line on one side of which cotton might be cultivated and not on the other, or could there be some other line, although I know, in general, that is regarded as the dividing line? But take, for instance, the Savannah River.

Mr. SMITH. The reason I suggested the Mississippi—and I shall take the question up more particularly with the entomologist—is because that is practically the dividing line between where artificial fertilizers are used and where they are not. It is also practically the dividing line as between the peculiar climatic conditions. Out on the western plains of Texas, where the sun gets extremely hot and the soil extremely dry, the larvæ of this pest are destroyed by the climate to such an extent that they do make something like a half crop under favorable conditions; but east of the Mississippi River the humidity is so great and the rainfall is so heavy, while the heat is not so great as it is beyond the Mississippi, that it makes it practically impossible to grow cotton in any year.

Take my State, with a production of a million and a half bales; the State of the Senator from Georgia, with a production of 2,000,000 bales; North Carolina, with a production of 1,250,000 bales; Alabama, with a production of 1,500,000 bales; in those States the production of cotton is being practically wiped out, and on what we do produce such prices are received as to ruin any man who attempts to grow cotton.

Furthermore, our income from the exportation of raw cotton abroad has maintained the balance of the trade in favor of America for more than 52 years, and with the discovery of the processes by which from the seed alone were taken the wonderful by-products such as lard and butter and cooking oil, cattle feed, and fertilizer, the seed were rapidly becoming as profitable as the cotton was a few years ago. Taking the two in conjunction, the loss to America is beyond calculation.

If the cotton producers of the South through the last 52 years had received a just compensation for the cotton which they produced, they might have been in a position in some way themselves to cooperate to combat this menace, but they have been under the heel of a master; they have been more or less without capital and without credit; and yet cotton is the only basis upon which there could be brought into the South food and clothing sufficient to meet the necessities of a war-ridden and oppressed people; and the purchasers have seen to it religiously that the price has never been advanced beyond the necessities of a bare living.

That policy has resulted in a menace to every cotton mill in America and to every cotton mill in Europe. As one of the foremost spinners of Europe said: If the American cotton crop shall fail, as it seems to be failing, it means that Lancashire, Manchester, Leeds, and Oldham, and all that cluster of mills upon the Manchester Canal, will have to be closed, and then what will the world have to wear? Of what use will the mills be?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I was reminded when I heard my colleague answer the question of the Senator from Utah of a statement made by a speaker week before last. He had come from Texas and was a very intelligent man, having been a demonstration agent in that State. He made a speech in which he said there were not 500 farmers in Texas who were then using chemical preventives; that they had lost faith so far as extirpating the weevil is concerned; but that the only remedy they had was by cultivation. The farmers were very blue, indeed.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it has been demonstrated in my State this year that, perhaps, the use of this poison will in some very minute way aid; but the bald fact stares us in the face that as a gift from the Creator America was given a monopoly of the raw material essential to the clothing of all the civilized peoples of the world; and as a result our stupid policy of allowing Liverpool, the members of whose exchange do not know a cotton stalk from the jimson weed, to dictate the price to America as to what we, America, with a monopoly of the cotton, shall get for our world's production, to-day the producers of cotton in America are the most notoriously poor people in the United States, although they have a practical monopoly of the world's production of cotton.

The weevil, however, seems to have a monopoly of that monopoly; and it is the duty of the Federal Government to cooperate with the several States and see, not as my colleague has intimated, that there shall merely be experiments conducted here and there, but that some system shall be devised which will not only reduce the ravages of but exterminate the boll weevil.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I judge from what the Senator is so well saying that he does not believe the National Government has done all that it ought to do to exterminate the pest to which he has referred.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think it has done so. From time to time the Congress has made appropriations for experimentation, but that has been going on for about 21 years and we have not even checked the ravages of the weevil as yet. That is true.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What does the Senator suggest should be done to remove this pest which is causing such extensive damage and injury to one of our great national assets?

Mr. SMITH. Stop planting cotton for one year is the suggestion. That would put the weevil beyond our borders, and then, by establishing a zone 100 miles in width east of the river, the flight of the weevil being not more than 60 miles during its migratory period, according to the preliminary statement by the entomologist, we would be rendered immune so long as we maintained the zone.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What expenditure would that involve?

Mr. SMITH. My information now is that probably the expense would be very slight as compared with the radical nature of the measure, because every cotton planter, knowing that he would not plant cotton in a given year, say in 1923, would put all of his acreage into foodstuffs and forage crops. The only thing that I would suggest would be that the Federal Government and the States obligate themselves to pay on the acreage planted a certain percentage of its value in order to enable the farmer to meet his taxes and current expenses necessary to keep him going on a credit basis.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. While the Senator has been speaking I have thought of the large sums of money appropriated to prevent damage caused by the overflowing of the Mississippi River in times of high water. In the case of the damage to cotton there is an injury being done that is tremendous compared to the injury caused by floods, and yet we are practically doing nothing, according to what the Senator says, despite the very serious and heavy annual financial loss to our people.

Mr. SMITH. The loss involved is practically a billion dollars a year. It would take nothing like that amount to aid the farmers, and it would be money well spent if we were to appropriate a billion dollars if by such an expenditure we could eradicate this pest, the ravages of which have increased rather than diminished during the time that we have been fighting it, for 21 years.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I read the article to which the Senator has called attention, and I was very much impressed by it. I think the Senator is making a very useful and valuable contribution by discussing this subject to-day, and I am very glad to hear him.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator. It seems as though it is a matter that does not seem to concern anyone. When we of the South were struggling and pleading for financial aid to hold what cotton we made for a price that would at least meet the cost of production, we were treated with indifference. In 1920, when deflation began, cotton was the first commodity to feel the effects of it. Cotton fell from 40 cents a pound to less than 10 cents a pound during the 12 months. Not only was the weevil taking two bales out of every four, but, under the policy of our Government, we were taking 3 cents out of every 4 in the price of cotton, thus burning the candle at both ends. Yet some people marvel that the income-tax receipts of the National Government are falling off and that the tax burdens of the national and local government are more grievous than the people can bear. That is the situation.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, granting that the Federal Government has the constitutional power to prevent the planting of crops that are injurious to the public health or injurious to the country generally, does the Senator from South Carolina think that the Congress has a right to pass a law prohibiting the planting of a harmless crop like cotton?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir; I do not believe that the Federal Government has any constitutional power whatever to say a word to a sovereign State as to what shall be planted within that State, but I do think that if a sovereign State will exercise its power and cooperate with the other sovereign States and then the Federal Government will aid them in tiding over the year of nonproduction by a proper appropriation to help them to live and sustain their credit, we will have met the situation. I do not believe the Federal Government has any power whatever to control the planting of any crop within a given State. I do think that the emergency which now confronts us in the cultivation of cotton is not only national but international in character. England is as much interested in the American cotton crop as is America; Europe is as interested as is America. Heretofore it has had an abundant supply; but consider these figures: When the weevil had spread from the western territory across the Mississippi and had covered all of the State, say, of North Carolina, production dropped from an average of 13,000,000 bales to a production last year of 7,900,000 bales. Our exports of cotton for 10 years averaged 7,456,000 bales annually. So it is apparent that our production last year only exceeded our average exportation of cotton by about 400,000 bales.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Which represents a drop in production of 100 per cent.

Mr. SMITH. A drop in production of practically 100 per cent.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And due almost entirely to this pest.

Mr. SMITH. It is due almost entirely to this pest. The domestic consumption of America averaged for 10 years 16,396,000 bales. The prospects are that the average consumption in America will increase; the probabilities are that this year our cotton crop will not exceed 9,000,000 bales. The Agricultural Department estimated that, based upon conditions as of August 25, the present crop would yield 10,500,000 bales; but they took the precaution to say: "It may be more or it may be less, on account of the uncertainty that attaches to the maturity of the crop and conditions from now on."

Well-informed men, men who know cotton, do not believe that the present crop will exceed 9,000,000 bales. Suppose our consumption in America maintains the average of 6,396,000 bales; we will have, out of a 9,000,000-bale crop, something like two and a half million bales to meet an export demand of an average of 7,000,000 bales.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And yet the prices do not rise with this reduced production.

Mr. SMITH. And yet the other day, when the Agricultural Department brought out a statement showing a condition of 57 per cent as compared with normal and indicated that the maximum crop upon that basis would be ten and a half million bales, which, with the carry over from last year, would lack something like two and a half million bales of meeting the world's demand for American cotton, the cotton market broke 100 points.

In view of that condition, how long do the Members of the Senate, who boast on this floor from time to time of the great resources of this country and of our marvelous trade, suppose that the balance of trade will be in favor of America. It is a notorious fact that our food production is rapidly being overtaken by consumption, so that in a few years we will cease to export foodstuffs, and, according to one of the experts of the department, we will be importing foodstuffs. What will happen when we will cease to export cotton and perhaps begin importing cotton to meet the demands of the increased population and the necessities of the people? Yet we sit here, not only paying no attention as a body to this frightful menace but raising not a finger in protest against the manipulation of our financial affairs that refuses credit to the man who desires to hold his cotton until he can get enough out of it to pay expenses.

To give you an idea of how things go, some one issued an order to the effect that any producer who attempted to hold cotton from one year into another year was necessarily speculating. I had an intimate friend who went to a banker and said, "I want to hypothecate this warehouse receipt for cotton as security for my note in order to borrow some money." The banker said, "In what year was the cotton made?" My friend said, "1920." The banker replied, "You can not get a dollar, because if the cotton is carried from one year to another we deem it speculation." In other words, it was not a question of the intrinsic value of the collateral put up but it was a question of forcing the producer, in his abject necessity, to sacrifice his product, leaving him interminably and hopelessly in debt.

Mr. President, I have tried to call the attention of the Senate to a menace the like of which never has fallen upon us before. I am not going to stand here and plead that the producer of this world necessity shall have extraordinary treatment for his benefit, though he has had extraordinary treatment for his destruction. I will not stand here and make a plea for that; but I am putting it upon the broad ground of a national asset and saying that as sensible men we ought to meet the ravages of this pest in a heroic manner and preserve this great American asset to the benefit of our country and the producer. I am making a plea that the power of this asset shall not pass from this country; and yet it is my prediction that unless this heroic remedy is applied and we cease the planting of cotton so as to eradicate this pest it is only a question of a few years before the supply of American cotton will be inadequate even to meet the demand of our own spindles.

Mr. President, in conclusion I want to make this plea:

We are now just upon the eve of gathering and marketing the crop of 1922. A small portion of the crop of 1921 is still in the hands of the producers. At the present price of cotton, at the present cost of production and the amount of production it would take three crops produced without cost to meet the indebtedness incurred in producing the crops of 1920 and 1921. I believe the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will agree with me that with the present price of cotton, the supply in sight, the prospective supply to be produced this year, with the carry over from last year, added to an entire crop of the same size that cost nothing to produce, if sold at the present price would not more than liquidate the indebtedness incurred by the drastic deflation of 1920 and 1921.

In my own case as a cotton producer, I can specify that my carry over, which I am fortunate enough to have, perhaps, or maybe unfortunate, plus this crop, plus the next crop, would not more than liquidate the indebtedness that I incurred to produce the crops of 1920 and 1921. It is a stupid policy for us to sit idly by and allow the Old World, Liverpool, to dictate to America the price of her world monopoly, and to impoverish the producer, and then come here and pass a tariff that is beyond all reason in protecting the manufacturer against the same source.

Mr. President, I hope that at least when I receive the report from the entomologist Senators will give their earnest attention to this subject, which means the balance of trade in our favor, which means the prosperity of all America. If you take $1,000,000,000 out of the primary circulation of this country by virtue of the failure of the cotton crop, it will affect every manufacturing plant from Florida to Maine and from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific. The untold millions that have been turned loose in the sale of cotton and cotton seed have largely spelled the development and progress of this country. It is coming to an end. The manufacturers of the West and Middle West and the East and the North must find some other place to dispose of their manufactured goods rather than in the South. It is a matter that calls for the most serious consideration of this body. Matters of less importance have received not only the serious consideration of this body but their hearty response. When the starving millions of Russia were menaced we poured out our largess. I am not asking you to give the South anything. I am asking you just to give us a fair chance under our common Government; and when I shall have received this report from the entomologist I propose to introduce a joint resolution looking toward the cooperation of the Federal Government, as far as the Constitution will allow, in ceasing the planting of cotton and bringing about a condition that means a to-morrow for the cotton grower of the South.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I am quite aware, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said, that this bill is not a complete remedy for the grave crisis now confronting the country in the production of coal; but it is the only remedy which can be immediately applied.

A bill has been suggested providing that the Government shall create a corporation to purchase and sell coal and to operate mines. Mr. President, if such a bill could be passed—and I doubt the advisability of it—it could not be put in operation for 60 or 90 days.

The scheme would require a large organization, a large appropriation by Congress, and the emergency would be over or the damage done before the remedy could be applied.

What does this bill seek to accomplish and what are the conditions surrounding the coal situation, both bituminous and anthracite?

For five months there has been a coal strike which has practically completely tied up the anthracite mines and the bituminous mines except in the so-called nonunion districts. In the nonunion districts there has been produced not over 50 per cent of the normal requirements per month of the country of bituminous coal. The result is that for five months the coal reserves in the country have been depleted until railroads and public utilities are perilously close to being shut down.

It is true that the bituminous strike has ended and the mines are prepared now to produce, and it looks as though the anthracite mines would resume very shortly; but owing to the exhaustion of the coal surplus in the country and the shortage, if the railroads of the country could move the normal or even the peak amount of coal per month priority orders would be necessary to supply those industries which are absolutely necessary to the life of the people—transportation, public utilities, and public institutions.

So, with the depleted condition of the roads, owing to the strike, it is impossible, without priority orders from the commission, to move enough bituminous or anthracite coal to supply in the next three months what is necessary for industries which are absolutely indispensable, and unless some drastic measure is taken the want of transportation for coal, just as much as the want of production, will make the price soar to unreasonable heights, and while I am opposed generally to paternal legislation to controlling prices this is a crisis, and unless something is done by priority orders of the commission to supply the essential industries at reasonable prices the country is going to lose hundreds of millions of dollars because the public utilities of this country, whose earnings are limited by law, can not pay the prices which are now being asked for coal at the coal mines in this country.

The great majority of bituminous operators in the nonunion districts—I think, 70 per cent of them—agreed with Mr. Hoover in May on a schedule of prices based on the Garfield prices plus their added costs since that time, and they have generally kept their agreements. Thirty per cent of the operators refused to join in that, and sold their coal for $6, $8, or $9 a ton at the mine, and many of the other operators are now breaking away from those agreements, and, with the impossibility of transporting coal enough to meet the demands of this country for manufacture and for public utilities, if the market is thrown wide open those who wish coal are going to bid prices which will raise the prices of coal to everybody in this country away beyond any reasonable profit. I am perfectly willing, and I think everybody else is, that those coal mines should have an opportunity to make liberal profits, even to make up their losses, but $4 or $5 a ton extra is not necessary for that purpose, as I think I can demonstrate when I come to the figures.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask, for information, whether it is a fact, as has repeatedly been stated, that the price fixed by Mr. Hoover and a large number of the coal operators was greatly in excess of the then market price and what would have been a fair return to the coal operators for the product which they were agreeing to sell?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think it was in excess. It ranged from about $2.50, I think, in the Alabama field, to $3.50 in the highest producing fields, and it was simply a maximum. The fixing of that price did not interfere with the prices fixed in contracts which mines had entered into, and the price was not really fixed by Mr. Hoover at all. It was simply an agreement by the operators that they would not exceed that price in the face of a national emergency which they knew would bring coal to an absurd price of $6, $8, or $10 at the mouth of the mine. It was based upon the Garfield prices plus certain additional expenses which the coal operators incurred after that time.

All of the mines have not followed the agreement, but a good many of them have. To-day, however, coal is being offered at the mouths of the mines in all of these districts at $6, $7, $8, and as high as $9 a ton, and purchasers are being advised to buy at those prices.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that is extortionate.

Mr. KELLOGG. I know that it is extortionate.

Mr. KING. My information is that the high price of coal to the consumers has largely resulted from the actions of speculators and brokers and intermediaries. I am told that many persons who never dealt in coal purchased from producers and from each other for purely speculative purposes and that by the cumulative purchases and practices the prices were advanced to levels that were unjust and caused prices to be advanced so as to be oppressive to the great mass of consumers. However, the statement just made by the Senator would seem to indicate that some mine operators were profiteering and robbing the public. I was going to suggest to the Senator, in view of the fact that speculators and brokers have gone in and bought coal, not for their own use but to hold for speculative purposes, that the Federal Government might pass a law making it a penal offense for men to buy coal for speculative purposes in a crisis of this kind, coal which passes in or is used in interstate commerce. I know that would be drastic, but it seems to me that if these robbers and exploiters are going to continue their nefarious work the power of the Federal Government may properly be exercised to restrain them and open the doors of the penitentiary for some of them.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, such action may become necessary. Of course, I have no doubt that there have been coal speculators who have sought to reap large profits out of the necessities of the country. It was thought by the committee that this bill, which could be instantly placed in operation by the commission without the creation of a large organization, which would take considerable time, would go far to relieve the situation, and that if we could get an expeditious movement of coal, speaking, now, of bituminous coal, with the proper orders of the commission for the use of cars, the price would be largely kept down. The other may become necessary.

Mr. President, I realize, as stated by the Senator from Alabama, that the present crisis is caused by the coal strike, which has been going on for five months, and is augmented by the railroad strike, which has been going on for over two months. The Senator from Alabama says the pending bill is not a remedy for this condition. I realize that also. But it is the only immediate remedy which can be applied in time to give priority to deliveries at reasonable prices.

I realize that some remedy must be found for such an industrial condition as has existed in this country during the last five months. There are especially two industries in the country which are absolutely necessary to the life of the Nation—that is, transportation and fuel—and it is not possible for the people to exist if any set of men, either labor unions or combinations in labor unions, or operators of transportation or of coal mines, can paralyze the industries and endanger the life and health of the people. I do not generally believe in paternal legislation. The power must exist and must be exercised to preserve the very existence of the Government and the life of the people. Every man has a right under the Constitution to freedom of action, to work or not to work as he sees fit, and nobody is going to invade that right; but no set of men, whether laborers or operators, have any constitutional right to conspire or combine for the purpose of stopping transportation or production of the necessaries of life.

Under our modern economic system railroads must run every day. A stoppage of transportation for one month would imperil the lives of millions of people, and coal production is necessary to transportation. It is of such universal use and necessity in modern life that a strike or a walkout may not only imperil the country but the lives of the people. Witness every year or two such scenes as at Herrin, dynamiting of trains, destruction of rolling stock, and almost a civil war, such as existed in West Virginia. Such scenes must and will be prohibited. Is this a government by force and intimidation or a government by law? I think this issue, thus sharply portrayed to-day, is one of the greatest that ever confronted the American people.

Before discussing the pending bill, let me state the condition of the country. It is essentially illustrated by the condition of the Northwest. All the coal, both bituminous and anthracite, which is used in northern Minnesota, North Dakota, most of South Dakota, and northern Wisconsin, must be transported between this time and the close of navigation, which ends on December 1—some years a little before and some years a little later.

The coal is transported to the Lake Erie ports, and from there transported by ships to the Lake Michigan and Lake Superior ports, Milwaukee, Sheboygan, Ashland, Superior, and Duluth, as well as Canadian ports.

It is true that some coal can be sent into southern Minnesota and South Dakota by rail from the Illinois fields, and some coal can be sent to Milwaukee from those fields; but the limitations upon transportation are such that it is a physical impossibility to supply northern Minnesota, including the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, northern Wisconsin, and North and South Dakota without lake transportation.

Ordinarily navigation opens about the 1st day of May, and by the 1st of September there are upon the docks of Superior and Duluth, at the head of the Lakes, which principally supply the country to which I have referred, outside of a district around Milwaukee, about 5,000,000 tons of bituminous coal, to say nothing about the anthracite, and they usually have about 750,000 tons of anthracite by this time of the year.

This year there have been transported to the head of the Lakes 473,000 tons, of which about 200,000 tons were transported back down the Lakes to keep the railroads from stopping, because of the absolute necessity for coal for railroad operations. So that we have net about 273,000 tons.

There are upon those docks to-day about 100,000 tons, which belong to the railroads and public utilities. In fact, more has been sold than has been shipped there. On Lake Michigan there are about 78,000 tons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission, to be known as the United States Coal Commission, for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, at the request of the Senator from Minnesota, the unfinished business will be laid aside, and the Senate will proceed with the consideration of House bill 12472.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I inquire if the unfinished business is not the House bill with the Senate committee substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the unfinished business is the bill which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] had in charge a few days ago, to establish a coal commission.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding was that we took up House bill 12472 on motion, and that became the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill was taken up by unanimous consent each time and the unfinished business temporarily laid aside.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am speaking upon the so-called Cummins substitute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to the bill which has been before the Senate being proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill 12472 is now before the Senate by unanimous consent, and the Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, a week ago I had a telegram from the Northern States Power Co. of St. Paul and Minneapolis, which operates the electric light and steam plants of those two cities and 216 other cities in Minnesota and northern Wisconsin, and I think North Dakota. I will read that part of the telegram which applies to the question of the supply of coal:

> We have only two weeks' supply of steam coal and four days' requirements in transit from Lake Erie ports. Are consuming 5,200 tons per week. At Minneapolis and St. Paul steam plants are shut down. If these plants shut down will discontinue electric service in Minneapolis and St. Paul and 216 cities and towns in southern Minnesota.

We have less than three weeks' supply of gas coal at Fargo, Grand Forks, Mankato, Faribault, and Stillwater, and require 1,000 tons per week.

The balance of the telegram is as to the details of their desire for action in transportation.

Mr. President, Mr. Griggs, manager of the ore and coal exchange at Cleveland, who is administering the priority orders as to shipments of coal to the Northwest, sent a telegram the 30th day of August to the Federal fuel director as follows:

Mr. HENRY B. SPENCER,
Federal Fuel Director,
718 Eighteenth Street N. W., Washington, D. C.:

While reports of no coal on upper lake docks at this time of navigation season is seriously impressive, the actual visualization which I had Monday of all commercial docks at Duluth and Superior swept clean and absolutely bare of coal when there should be 5,000,000 tons stored, and with nights in Northwest already requiring some heat, is vastly more startling than any one in Washington or elsewhere actually realizes. Winter approaching, docks empty, and definite indications of shortage of cars and transportation for all coal to Northwest, make it absolutely necessary in my opinion that every customer and dealer in the Northwest make contracts or place definite buying orders in upper lake docks at once for actual minimum requirements until opening navigation next spring so that aggregate requirements for the winter will be determined and utmost efforts put forth to secure enough coal to avoid suffering until next spring. Only 12 weeks left for lake shipment.

H. M. GRIGGS,
Manager Ore & Coal Exchange, Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if to the telegram which he has just read is not attached a photograph of the docks showing that they are swept clean?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have received many photographs of which this [exhibiting] is a fair example. One can not see a piece of coal on the docks. That is the general condition. If that country tributary to Duluth and Superior does not receive at least 6,000,000 tons of coal public utilities will have to close down during the winter, and if it does not receive a million tons of anthracite the people of the Northwest are going to suffer for want of fuel. From the best calculation I can make, if the railroads can handle the coal it is not going to be possible to put through the Lake Erie docks more than 13,000,000 tons as a maximum, which goes to supply not only the Lake Michigan and Lake Erie ports but Detroit, Port Huron, the Canadian ports, and many other places which will get coal out of that supply.

So that I see no escape from the conclusion that with everything the Interstate Commerce Commission can do, and I believe they will do everything they can, to give priority for the transportation of bituminous coal and anthracite from now until the close of navigation, the Northwest is bound to suffer. Nine million tons is the normal amount which the head of the Lakes would take in bituminous alone and about 10,700,000 tons of bituminous and anthracite. In fact, all of the lake ports during 1918 to 1921 received each year upwards of 15,000,000 tons; in 1918 over 16,000,000 tons; in 1919 over 15,000,000 tons; in 1920 there was a shortage and much coal was transported by railroad; and in 1921 over 15,000,000 tons. The totals to all ports, Canadian, Lakes Erie, Superior, and Michigan, this year have been only 4,649,000 tons, of which a large part went to Chicago, Detroit, and similar places.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] stated that in his opinion the House bill and the so-called Cummins bill which has been offered as a substitute, do not grant any power beyond that which the Interstate Commerce Commission now has. In my opinion, the Senator is in error in this regard. The power which the commission now has under section 402 of paragraph 15 of the transportation act, so far as it applies to the priority orders, is as follows:

To give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movement of traffic under permits, at such time and for such periods as it may determine, and to modify, change, suspend, or annul them.

Then follows the provision as to action in the time of war. I am not going to stop at this time to argue the legal aspects of one clause of the so-called Cummins bill, but the commission construes that to give them priority for the use of all equipment to supply certain districts or necessary industries in preference to other industries, public utilities over ordinary industries, but that it does not give them the power to furnish preferred transportation to the coal mines which are willing to sell at reasonable prices. It may be that a broad construction of that provision would include the power, but the bills now before the Senate, both the House bill and the Cummins bill, make that perfectly clear, and to the Cummins bill I desire for a few moments to ask the attention of the Senate.

The bill authorizes the commission as follows:

SEC. 2. That the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, including the transportation act, 1920, and especially under section 402 of said transportation act, 1920, are, during the aforesaid emergency, enlarged to include the authority to issue in interstate transportation of coal or other fuel orders for priorities, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier, or region, or person, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for the priority in transportation and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

It is true probably that the Federal Government in a great emergency has the power to preserve the life and the health of the people. It is true that the Federal Government could undoubtedly take over all the mines if it were necessary to do that. It is true that the Federal Government could probably organize a corporation to buy and sell all the coal. But, as I said, an organization so vast could not be put into effective operation for 60 or possibly 90 days and by that time the damage would be done. It is questionable whether such authority should be granted at this time.

Mr. President, as said upon this floor, there is coal enough being produced in the anthracite mines which can be sold at a reasonable price, and I do not think anybody who advocates this legislation is going to stand upon the floor of the Senate and deny to the operator a liberal price. I notice that the various State administrations in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, West Virginia, and other States have fixed a price on an average of about $1 higher than the Hoover price. I do not think anybody would question that, but when coal can be purchased in quantities which will equal the power of the railroads to transport to the market, to the consumers of the United States, and be sold at such a reasonable price, why should we not give preference to cars to handle that coal as against the man who wants to take advantage of the necessities of the people, of the panic which ensues under such conditions as this, and offers his coal at $6, $7, $8, or $9 a ton at the mines, which may mean $10, $11, $12, or $15 to the consumer?

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and other Senators intend to discuss the constitutionality of that feature, and I shall not stop at this time to do so. In my opinion it is an exercise of the constitutional power of the Government, because the excessive price of coal, partly used for railroad transportation, is a direct burden on interstate commerce within the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

It has been said on the floor that excessive prices for coal are not now being charged, and will not be charged, because there is a surplus of production; but the limitation of transportation creates just as great an inducement to demand and to receive excessive prices as would a limitation upon production. I hold in my hand, Mr. President, a synopsis which is published in the Black Diamond of August 19, 1922, and I have confirmed the quotations which it contains down to within the last two or three days. This synopsis shows that in practically all the coal fields east of the Mississippi River and in the principal coal-marketing cities coal is being offered to-day by the producers at enormous and exorbitant prices, and is being taken by those consumers who had rather pay those prices than to run the risk of not getting coal.

What will be the condition if coal is thrown open to general bidding and competition among the purchasers? Manufacturing companies whose coal consumption enters even to a small degree into the production of their product will bid any price for their coal. That necessarily will put up the price of coal to everybody else. They would rather pay the high price than not to continue their manufacturing industry. Public utilities can not stand such prices; the people can not stand them; and they should not be permitted. Why should not the Interstate Commerce Commission give preference in cars for transporting coal from those mines which are willing to receive a reasonable price and which can supply, to the extent they can supply at all, the needs of the country?

In the statement to which I have referred I find that in the Chicago market coal is being offered at $9 a ton, the prices having advanced 50 cents a ton in the last two days. In the Minneapolis market screenings were sold late in the week at $11.50 for Youghiogheny, Hocking, and splint. "Eastern Kentucky coal sold at from $8 to $15. Pocahontas lump and egg sizes sold at from $14.50 to as high as $15.95, with mine run from $12.50 to $13.75, and screenings from $11.50 to $12.75."

LOUSVILLE, KY.—It is reported that such open-market coal as is available is quoted at from $7.50 to $8.50 a ton at mine. Some of the railroads are refusing to pay over the $3.50 to $4 price on priority fuel, but a great deal of coal on priority orders is selling at well above regulated prices.

At Detroit there is the same report.

At Indianapolis, Ind., right near the coal belt, there is the same report. At Norfolk, Va., it is the same as it is at Cincinnati and Cleveland. As to Cumberland, Md., it is stated:

Prices are still soaring to a great extent, the prevailing price on coal in the several pools ranging from $6 to $7.20 at the very minimum—

That is at the mine—

Fairmont (W. Va.)—

Which is the center of the great Fairmont district—market conditions remain much the same in so far as they affect northern West Virginia, the price range during the greater part of last week having been from $6 to $7.25 per ton.

At Bluefield, W. Va., the price has been from $6 to $8 a ton; in Ashland, Ky., it has been from $6 to $7.25 per ton. As to Birmingham, Ala., it is stated:

Buyers in the spot market are reported to be paying $5 to $6 per ton mines for run-of-mine and washed coal and about the same for lump for domestic use.

In Pittsburgh, Pa., the price is from $8 to $8.50 per ton; and for Connellsville steam coal it is from $7.50 to $7.75 per ton for mine run.

Then follow quotations in a large number of other places, which I shall not take the time of the Senate to read.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand [exhibiting] a bundle of letters from coal operators all over Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Ohio demanding for coal from $6 to $9 a ton at the mines. Tell me they are not profiteering! I shall not weary the Senate by reading these letters, though any Senator may see them if he desires. They are only a few of the hundreds of letters which are being sent to the Fuel Administration in Washington.

Mr. President, as I have said before, I am loath to go into price fixing. I have seen it tried; but, Mr. President, there is facing this country to-day the greatest emergency in the coal situation which has faced the country since I can remember in time of peace, brought about by the strike which has lasted for five months. It is perfectly fair to allow the coal operators to add a reasonable price, even to make up their losses, but no man will stand upon this floor and claim that 25 cents, or 50 cents a ton at the very outside, will not cover the additional cost and the additional profits which are necessary to the operators. A charge for coal of $4, $5, or $6 over a reasonable price is simply robbery of the American people.

I know of no way adequately and speedily to handle this situation except through transportation facilities. If the industries of the country generally can stand such a price, the public utilities can not do it, for their earnings are limited by law. Freight rates are already too high. Are they going to be reduced by permitting the coal operators to demand of the railroads $6, $7, or $8 a ton at the mine? Can street railways and lighting companies and public institutions pay such a price? Can the people generally pay it?

Mr. President, in the last two years there has been the greatest depression in agriculture throughout this country that I have known for many years. The tremendous increase in the cost of labor and in the cost of supplies incident to the production of agricultural crops has burdened the farmers so that when their prices went below pre-war prices many of them were bankrupt. Can the farmers of this country pay $15, $18, $20, or $25 a ton for coal and receive only 60 or 75 cents a bushel for their wheat and corresponding prices for their other products?

To-day the market price of farm products is going down. Undoubtedly that is partially due to the derangement of the market caused by the railroad strike and lack of transportation facilities, but, correspondingly, the price of coal, which the farmers must buy, is going up. I believe that it is a proper and just exercise of the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to give preferred transportation to the coal mines—and there are plenty of them which can mine and sell coal at a reasonable price. If that is done, and the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission are enforced, all of the available transportation facilities of the country are going to be turned into the carrying of coal and, so far as possible, the country will be relieved.

There are two sections of the United States which will probably suffer more than any other sections. One is the Northwest, where winter will stop the transportation by the 1st of December, and the other is New England. New England has shipped in more than the usual quantity of coal by water, but it is over 4,000,000 tons short by rail shipment. It is true that New England can ship coal every day in the year and that the resumption of operations in the union mines, bituminous and anthracite in Pennsylvania and other northern districts, will undoubtedly relieve New England to a great extent, but the limitations of transportation are going to make it extremely difficult, if not impossible, adequately to supply the Northwest, and to-day the railroads, public utilities, and public institutions are facing a shutdown, and many industries will have to close down. I fear there is going to be great suffering in spite of everything which can be done. I believe we are confronted by an emergency which calls for drastic action, and certainly the bill of the Senator from Iowa is not too drastic in this respect.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to conclude the observations which I began at the last session of the Senate. As an addition, however, to the showing just made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], I desire to read a telegram which I received from my own State yesterday morning. This telegram is sent to me by the president of the Iowa City Gas & Electric Co. It is a public utility organization which supplies that city, being the home of the State university, with light and power. It says:

Four dollars and fifty cents per ton is price fixed by all operators for southern Illinois screenings. This is double last year's price, and double price fixed by Government during war. The pre-war price on same screenings was 90 cents per ton. The public service business and industry can not stand such extortion. Coal is a vital commodity that supplies the life to industry. Its price must be controlled by the United States Government if industry shall live. Can not relief be given, and quickly, to a situation—to a situation which is damnable?

And I use the words of the telegram; they are not my own—

There are many other instances of the same character, not only in Iowa but in many other States of the Union. It seems almost unspeakable that coal operators who are now at work with wages just as they were last September or October, or before the strike, should more than double the price of this inferior quality of coal—coal that can only be used, generally speaking, in large furnaces and the like. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has said, there would be nothing remarkable if, in view of the idleness of these mines for the last six months, there should be added 25 or 50 cents per ton, to continue for six months to come, in order to compensate for the period of inactivity; but to double the price of coal of this character seems to me to call for quick and efficient action upon the part of the Government of the United States.

When I suspended Saturday afternoon I was considering the differences between the House bill and the Senate bill. I have concluded that review, with the exception of two distinctions or differences, and I name them, not, however, to dwell upon them.

The House bill provides that of the appropriation of $250,000, $50,000 may be used to pay the expenses incurred by the fuel administration appointed by the President some weeks ago, whereas the Senate bill does not contain a like provision. I say frankly that I am in entire sympathy with the provision of the House bill in that respect. If the bill goes to conference I shall feel at liberty, unless otherwise instructed by the Senate, to yield to the House provision in that respect.

The last difference that I care to mention relates to the period of the duration of the law, and that I regard as somewhat important.

The House bill provides, in section 8, that—

Whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the existing emergency has passed he may by proclamation so declare, and thereupon the exercise of the powers conferred under this act shall be suspended.

At any time hereafter, when the President shall determine that an emergency exists caused by shortage of supply or inequitable distribution of coal or other fuel, which endangers the public health and general welfare of the people of the United States, or injures industry and business generally throughout the United States, or causes extortion, or limits the supply of heat, light, and power, or threatens to obstruct and hamper the operation of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, or the transportation of the mails, or the operation and efficiency of the Army and the Navy, or the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States, or with foreign countries, the President may proclaim that an emergency so exists and thereupon the powers conferred by this act shall be revived and in full force and effect.

In connection with that, however, I will read section 11 of the House bill, which provides:

Except as to prosecutions for offenses, the provisions of this act shall cease to be in force and effect January 1, 1924.

The Senate bill has this provision on that subject:

SEC. 5. That whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the national emergency hereby declared has passed, he shall by proclamation declare the same, and thereupon this act shall no longer be in force or effect, and in no event shall it continue in force and effect for longer than one year from the passage thereof.

Those who followed the two provisions will see that under the House provision, while the law will expire absolutely on January 1, 1924, yet during that period in which the law is in force the President might declare the existing emergency at an end, and thereupon the law would be suspended, but at any time before the 1st of January, 1924, he could by proclamation revive the operation of the law, whereas under the Senate bill when he declares the emergency which Congress has now recognized at an end he can not revive the law by declaring another emergency to exist, and the law itself ceases to operate at the end of one year after the bill has passed.

Personally I very much prefer the Senate provision. I am reluctant to give this great power to the commission, and I do not want it to continue a moment longer than the existing emergency continues. When that emergency has passed, if another one shall arise Congress can deal with that as it is now dealing with the present situation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks the courts would attach the same weight to the finding of an emergency by the President that they do attach to the declaration of an emergency by Congress?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the courts would not attach the same consequences or weight to a declaration by the executive branch of the Government that they will attach to a declaration by Congress. That is perfectly evident to anyone who has read the decisions of the courts which refer to powers that may be exercised during an emergency.

With this, Mr. President, I turn to the points that have been raised with regard to the constitutionality of the proposed statute. I need hardly say that I do not intend to review all the cases upon this subject. They are very numerous; they are very unlike, and it is not difficult for an ingenious mind to discover some want of harmony in these decisions; but I believe that in a very short review of the rulings of the Supreme Court I can convince an open mind that the power we seek to give the Interstate Commerce Commission in this bill is a constitutional power, and that we can confer under the authority of the Constitution the power that we propose to confer in this bill.

The clause of the Constitution which gives Congress the right to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes is, as everybody agrees, the most comprehensive power bestowed upon Congress in the Constitution. I think the Supreme Court has so described that power many times; and it is quite evident that as commerce changes—and commerce is the great characteristic of the development of the United States—the application of this clause in the Constitution must from time to time change in order to meet the necessities of the existing situations.

There are but two limitations of the power given to Congress to regulate commerce among the States; and I am not philosophizing myself, because the Supreme Court has said this repeatedly. The first qualification is that the proposed measure of legislation must be a regulation of commerce among the States. The second—and it is the only other—is that the measure proposed must not violate another specific provision of the Constitution.

As an instance of the two qualifications, I may mention, first, the recent decision of the Supreme Court in what is known as the child-labor case. I am not referring now to the decision invalidating the tax law, but to the decision upon the act of Congress which was based upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States. In that case—and I will examine it a little more minutely in a moment—the Supreme Court held the act unconstitutional because it was not a regulation of commerce among the States.

Another instance can be found in any of the several cases in which a regulation of commerce, whether directly by Congress or through the instrumentality of the Interstate Commerce Commission, has been declared by the Supreme Court invalid because it violated the fifth amendment to the Constitution; that is to say, it took property for a public use without just compensation. If either Congress or the Interstate Commerce Commission should prescribe a rate for a service to be rendered by a railroad company that, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, did not furnish just compensation for the service, and therefore was confiscatory, the Supreme Court would invalidate or void the regulation, whether it be from Congress or whether it be from the Interstate Commerce Commission, by reason of its repugnance to the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

I give these two illustrations in which the Supreme Court has applied in the one instance the doctrine that the legislation did not constitute a regulation of commerce among the States, and the other is an instance in which, although the regulation was properly a regulation of commerce among the States, yet, inasmuch as it was in violation of another specific provision of the Constitution, it could not be sustained.

Mr. President, this proposed legislation can be sustained upon either of two grounds. It can be sustained on the ground that the evil which it proposes to remedy constitutes an undue burden upon interstate commerce. There are two decisions of the Supreme Court which are very clear, and, as it seems to me, very convincing upon this point.

In the case of Stafford against The Secretary of Agriculture, the Supreme Court sustained a recent act for the regulation of stockyards upon precisely that theory. I need not review the terms or the purpose of that act, because it is perfectly familiar to all Senators. But among the provisions of that act was a prohibition against undue or unreasonable charges and exactions relating to services rendered in and about the stockyards, which are described by the bill, and which come within its scope.

It was urged before the Supreme Court, with great force, that the operations of the stockyards were purely intrastate operations; that when an animal came from the west and passed into the stockyards, there to be sold to a packer and to be manufactured by that packer into meat, and the meat transported to the East, so far as the operations of the stockyards were concerned they were purely intrastate. The Supreme Court disposed of that contention without much difficulty, and I need not read the manner in which it connects the stockyards and the function they perform in transforming live animals into meat for human consumption, but I do want to read one paragraph, possibly two, referring to the commissions and exactions which prevail and are charged by those who are either in the employ of the stockyards company or who are there for the purpose of purchasing cattle, or taking some part in the great transformation which begins after the cattle are sold. All will remember that Chief Justice Taft rendered the opinion in this case. Said the Chief Justice:

> The object to be secured by the act is free and unburdened flow of live stock from the ranges and farms of the West and the Southwest through the great stockyards and slaughtering centers on the borders of that region, and thence in the form of meat products to the consuming cities of the country in the Middle West and East, or, still, as live stock, to the feeding places and fattening farms in the Middle West or East for further preparation for the market.

I read now another part of the decision:

> Congress thought that the power to maintain this monopoly was aided by control of the stockyards. Another evil, which it sought to provide against by the act, was exorbitant charges, duplication of commissions, deceptive practices in respect of prices, in the passage of the live stock through the stockyards, all made possible by collusion between the stockyards management and the commission men on the one hand and the packers and dealers on the other.

Now mark:

> Expenses incurred in the passage through the stockyards necessarily reduce the price received by the shipper, and increase the price to be paid by the consumer. If they be exorbitant or unreasonable, they are an undue burden on the commerce which the stockyards are intended to facilitate. Any unjust or deceptive practice or combination that unduly and directly enhances them is an unjust obstruction to that commerce.

I need not read more, although the remaining part of that paragraph is very interesting and instructive. The whole opinion reflects a single view with regard to the connection between such practices and interstate commerce.

The other decision which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate, which I shall not read, although I have it here, is the decision of the Supreme Court in the late case of the Railroad Commission of Wisconsin against the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co. That case arose under the transportation act of 1920, and the facts were that under that act, on the 26th of August, the Interstate Commerce Commission advanced not only freight charges but advanced passenger rates 20 per cent, together with what is known as a Pullman surcharge. The latter, however, is not material to be mentioned at this time.

A statute of the State of Wisconsin provided a fare of 2 cents a mile for passengers within the State of Wisconsin. The Railroad Commission of Wisconsin advanced the freight rates in that State in the same proportion precisely that the Interstate Commerce Commission had advanced interstate rates, but, of course, declined to advance passenger fares, because it had no authority to do so, the fixing of those rates being an act of the legislature. I may remark that during the period of Federal control, when the Government was operating the railroads, the statute had fallen into disuse, because it was assumed that the Federal authority superseded the State authority so long as the Government was in operation of the property, and during that time the passenger fares in Wisconsin had been 3 cents per mile. But when the Interstate Commerce Commission increased the rates 20 per cent, that meant 20 per cent above the rates that had theretofore been charged by the Government, or 3.6 cents per mile.

In that situation this suit was brought, and it was brought to determine whether the Interstate Commerce Commission had the authority to increase passenger rates in Wisconsin between points in Wisconsin to 3.6 cents a mile. There were some complications about the matter with regard to the proof as to certain points in Wisconsin, but upon the proof, which was undoubted, the difference between the rate that was then being charged by the railroad companies for passengers and the rate which had been ordered by the Interstate Commerce Commission in interstate traffic would make a difference in revenue of something like six or eight million dollars annually. I am possibly getting that figure too high. I do not recall just the amount, but the amount is not material. It was substantial, however.

In that situation the case came to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court held, with an amplitude of reasoning, and apparently without any difference of opinion, that although as an original proposition Congress could not affect rates wholly within the State of Wisconsin, and had no authority as an original proposition over them, yet, because the diminished rates in Wisconsin yielded a lesser revenue than rates for a like service in commerce or transportation between the States, therefore the Wisconsin rates constituted an undue burden upon interstate commerce; and held, further, that the rates established by the Interstate Commerce Commission superseding the rates in Wisconsin were valid rates, and the court held that, of course, upon the theory that the rates in Wisconsin were so inseparably connected with interstate commerce that the association itself gave to Congress and gave to the Interstate Commerce Commission as complete power over the State rates as though they had been rates governing the transportation of passengers between the States.

So that the proposition, Mr. President, that Congress can assume authority and can confer authority upon the Interstate Commerce Commission over any local or State institution or regulation or whatnot which affects or burdens interstate commerce is so well established that I need not go further in presenting it at this time. So much for the law. Now, with respect to the application of that phase of the matter to the present case.

The pending bill proposes to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to prohibit a carrier from furnishing transportation or cars to anyone who is charging for the commodity in question an unreasonably high price. The Senate bill acts only upon the carriers.

Under the Senate bill there could be no order issued against anyone but the carrier which proposed to transport such a commodity. Remember, in the first place, that the railroads themselves use for transportation purposes nearly 30 per cent of all the coal that is consumed in the United States. It is obvious, therefore, that the exaction of an unreasonable price for the coal which must be consumed by the railroads for motive power or for other purposes necessarily is a burden upon interstate commerce. There is no one charge that can be made for any commodity sold to the railroad companies which so quickly and so directly affects not only the ability of the companies to serve the public but affects the charge which the railroad companies must make in order to serve the public as the disposition of coal, and for that reason, if for no other, we have the right to prescribe that a railroad company shall not, so long as its cars are needed elsewhere, furnish transportation to a coal operator or a coal dealer who is exacting unfair, unreasonable, and extortionate prices.

But it is more than that. Under the decision of the Supreme Court to which I have referred and from which I have read in the stockyards case the unreasonable price of coal as it circulates through the commerce of the United States, disregarding now the effect of it upon the railroads themselves, is an undue and an unreasonable burden upon commerce. Why was it that the Supreme Court said that we have the power to say that those who render services in the stockyards in Chicago should not charge more than a reasonable price for their labor or their service, or whatever it may have been? It was solely because when the unreasonable price was charged and the commodity upon which the charge was imposed passed into interstate channels of commerce those channels were obstructed and it did not flow with that freedom and facility which the Constitution intended to give Congress the power to preserve. It is utterly impossible to distinguish in principle between the cases which I have cited and the case which we have now before us. The bill does not touch the coal operator. It imposes no penalty upon him. It may be that we ought to do it, but the bill imposes no penalty upon the coal operator. It simply takes care of the channels of interstate trade after the coal is loaded upon the car and begins its journey to another State.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. How would the Senator treat cars that were loaded under contract? Would the bill undertake to interfere with prior orders?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not going to predict or try to predict just what can be done under the provisions of the bill. I am very sure that if a coal man has entered into a contract to sell coal at $2 a ton and is willing to sell it at $2 a ton, or whatever may be a reasonable price, there could be and would be no interference in that case. If, on the other hand, the mine operator and the consumer had entered into a contract for coal at $10 a ton at the mouth of the mine, and that was $6 or $7 more than ought to be charged, giving the mine operator a reasonable profit upon the coal, it might be that that operator would find difficulty in securing cars for the delivery of that coal until other mines which were willing to sell at a reasonable price had been able to deliver their product.

But the Senator from South Carolina is one of the ablest lawyers in the Senate. I have discussed with him cognate subjects, and he knows as well as I do what may happen. I would not guarantee to the Senator from South Carolina that the one who has through some necessity entered into an agreement to pay a coal operator an excessive price for coal would at all times be able to get his coal. I would not guarantee that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator stated a few moments ago that the bill does not impose a penalty upon the operator.

Mr. CUMMINS. None at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How, then, is it proposed through the bill to control the price of the commodity unless it does impose the penalty of withholding cars?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall hope that when the bill is passed every operator will see that it is for his benefit and his advantage to sell coal at a reasonable price. If he does not sell coal at a reasonable price, the chances are he will not sell any coal at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is entirely a matter of personal opinion——

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, entirely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a matter of the operator's opinion as to what is a fair and reasonable price, and he, knowing more about the business than some bureau officer here, might differ with that officer.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, certainly; but there is no bureau officer who has anything to do with the matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He might differ with the bureau officer as to what is a fair and reasonable price. He would certainly then be penalized for his opinion about the subject——

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And have cars withheld from him.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is the Interstate Commerce Commission that determines whether coal is being sold at an unreasonably high price. It is not a bureau officer. It is not an individual. The Interstate Commerce Commission does it and issues its orders with all the sense of responsibility which accompanies and ought to accompany every official act.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. As a matter of fact, I might say that heretofore the prices fixed have been simply by agreement of the operators themselves, and the so-called Hoover price was nothing more than an agreement of the operators that they would not go above that price, not in any way affecting contract coal below that price.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true. Up to this time what might be called the unofficial arrangement, which has been made and which I think has resulted in great good both to coal operators and to the public, has been a purely voluntary one, and its observance by a large percentage of the operators has been very much to their credit. I am not suggesting that any of the operators who made the agreement which fixed the price at which they should sell coal desire to depart from it. I do know, however, that there is a great deal of coal now being mined for which an unreasonable price is asked, and we are trying to reach that situation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to state that I have been credibly informed that some operators who did enter into the agreement have served notice that they would not longer be bound by it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was told so. It may be so. The temptation is very great when a man is offered $10 a ton for coal that cost him $2, and I am not surprised that the man who owns the coal takes it. But if we confer this authority upon the Interstate Commerce Commission it would help him somewhat to withstand that very severe temptation.

I now pass to the second proposition of law. I have considered the general subject with regard to the validity of the law as tested by the criterion of the burden upon interstate commerce. I have no doubt that the law is bottomed upon a strong and unassailable foundation. But there is another ground upon which it could be placed, I think, with equal assurance of its being finally held valid.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the Senator passes from the line of argument he has been pursuing, would he mind my submitting some observations suggested by his argument?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It has occurred to me that there is very much force to the argument made by the Senator to the effect that an exorbitant price for coal used for power purposes, in transportation by railways, lays such a heavy burden upon interstate commerce that it is possibly within the power of Congress to regulate the price of the coal for use in railway service. Of course, if we admit that, we must likewise admit that it is within the power of Congress to regulate the price of steel entering into the construction of railroads, both the right of way and rolling stock. If we admit that, we must, of course, admit that high rates of interest charged upon loans which the railroad companies may make lay also an undue burden upon interstate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have already recognized that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Shall we regulate the rate of interest?

Mr. CUMMINS. We have regulated that through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SHIELDS. May I ask the Senator would it not also include the wages paid to employees?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It occurs to me that the argument of the Senator finds much support in the decision of the Supreme Court sustaining the Adamson law. It was there held that the rate of wages paid to the operatives and their continuance in the service are so intimately bound up with the problem of transportation that Congress may regulate the wages paid to the men; but when we go beyond that and reach the question of the price asked for coal not for sale to the railroad companies for use in the operation of the railroads, but for general consumption and to purchasers other than the railroad companies, we have progressed considerably beyond the realm which we have been discussing; and, of course, then we must admit that the exorbitant prices for any commodity passing in interstate commerce impose a burden upon interstate commerce, and accordingly Congress would have a right to regulate the price of any such commodities.

Reference has been made to the Packers' case and to the Wisconsin Commission case and others of that character. I have no recollection of the exercise of any regulatory power by the State governments over any rates except such as are connected in a way with service, not with commodities. Rates charged for the service of the railroad companies may be regulated; the rates charged for the services of elevator and other warehouse companies may be regulated; and the rates charged for services rendered by electric light companies and by water companies may be regulated; for, I take it, the delivery of water through mains laid under the public streets and other places, the right to occupy which is acquired under the right of eminent domain, can hardly be regarded as a sale of a commodity, the same as the sale of a yard of calico is regarded. So, the service rendered by the stockyards is a service, as indicated by the Senator from Iowa, in the transportation of the commodity from the producer to the consumer passing in interstate commerce. That service may be regulated by State authority, in the first place, and, constituting a link of interstate commerce, it may be regulated by the General Government.

So likewise with reference to the rates prescribed by the statute of the State of Wisconsin for transportation in intrastate business. Of course, if such rates are inordinately low correspondingly high rates must be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon commodities passing in interstate shipment, and in that way the charge made for the intrastate service lays an undue burden upon the charge for transportation in interstate commerce; but it seems to me we have not yet gotten anywhere near the proposition which is now before us, namely, the regulation of the price of commodities, not service which is affected with a public use, in a sense, but the charges for commodities which are purchased in the general market and for general use.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Might I remind the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] of the case of Lemke et al. against Farmers' Grain Co., of Embden, N. Dak., where the State of North Dakota sought to fix the price of wheat, but the Supreme Court held that action to be invalid because wheat was subject to interstate commerce and a subject of Federal jurisdiction.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What conclusion does the Senator from Wisconsin draw from that?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Montana had said that he could not recall any case where a State had undertaken to fix the price of a commodity. The commodity the price of which was attempted to be fixed in this instance was wheat.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I had not that case in mind; but, apparently, the action of the State was not sustained.

Mr. LENROOT. It was not sustained because and only because wheat was the subject of Federal jurisdiction and not State jurisdiction.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Federal courts held that it could not be done.

Mr. LENROOT. That it could not be done by the State.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is, that the State of North Dakota could not do it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Supreme Court did not hold that the price even of a commodity which did not enter into interstate commerce could be fixed by the State authority.

Mr. LENROOT. That question was not involved, because the court held that wheat was a matter of interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am speaking, of course, of the regulation ordinarily prescribed and endeavoring to point out that legislation of such character is directed to service rather than to commodities.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is obvious that neither the Wisconsin case nor the stockyards case is exactly parallel to the present proposition. Anyone must concede that in a moment. I cited those cases principally for the purpose of establishing the conclusion that, no matter how exclusive the jurisdiction of a State may be over the particular subject matter, if it undoubtedly attaches a burden to interstate commerce it becomes a subject of Federal legislation and Federal power; and that must necessarily be so if the channels of interstate commerce are always to be kept free and unobstructed; that is, theoretically free and unobstructed.

The Senator from Montana must never forget that this bill does not touch the operator; it does not touch the coal miner; it regulates only the common carrier. I know that the Senator from Montana will say that the courts may inquire into the motives, into the purposes, of Congress, and will assert that while this is in terms the regulation of a common carrier, and only with regard to the interstate business of that common carrier, yet what we are really trying to do is to prevent the operator or the dealer from charging an unreasonable price. I think, however, that is not material to the inquiry. I do not believe that the Supreme Court has either the right legally or morally to inquire into the motives of the Congress which passes a law. I do not forget what the Senator said the other day about the last "child-labor" decision, and that the Supreme Court did there what it refused to do when Congress passed the law taxing State bank circulation 10 per cent and when it passed a half score of other taxing laws which were intended for regulation rather than for raising revenue; I do not forget any of those cases; but when we apply our regulation to the carrier, prescribing the conditions under which that carrier may receive goods and commodities for transportation, that is, and must necessarily be, a regulation of interstate commerce. The question of whether the Supreme Court would say that what we really intended was to keep down the price of coal I regard as an immaterial one.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In what I said awhile ago I assumed that there would be no concealment—and there is no concealment—of the real purpose of this proposed legislation, namely, to prevent the exaction of exorbitant prices for coal under the conditions which now exist.

Mr. CUMMINS. Broadly speaking, that is true, but the immediate purpose is to prohibit a carrier from carrying coal which is sold at an exorbitant price.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the immediate purpose. It may be that will have no effect upon the coal operator; that if he can sell his coal at an exorbitant price and deliver it in any way known to him, he can go on selling and delivering it, and we can not reach him. The effect of the bill in reducing prices is wholly indirect; it is not direct.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I repeat what I said the other day, that were it not for the position of the Supreme Court in the "child-labor" case and in the grain-futures case I should have no misgivings whatever about the validity of this proposed legislation; but, if the law is to be applied to this measure as it was applied in those cases, we must get back to the question, it seems to me, of the power of Congress to regulate the price. I never had the slightest doubt, as I said the other day, about the power of Congress to exercise plenary power in the matter of interstate transportation. I do not conceive that there are any restrictions, except as indicated by the Senator, where it is otherwise provided in the Constitution; but the Supreme Court has declared otherwise; and they have declared also that, notwithstanding the act appears on its face to be a revenue measure, the court may go beyond what appears upon its face and determine what the real purpose and motive of Congress in the enactment of the legislation was. As stated by the Senator from Iowa, that seems to me to be quite out of harmony with a long line of decisions from which there was no variation whatever; but here, Mr. President, it occurs to me that the purpose is not only disclosed in the general debate upon the matter, but appears upon the face of the bill itself, namely, to prevent the exaction of exorbitant prices; and that is to be accomplished by preventing the transportation of commodities of a certain character in interstate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I intend to read a few passages from the first "child-labor" decision and to point out what I regard as a very palpable distinction between that case and this.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. In this connection, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that in the "child-labor" case the Supreme Court virtually overruled the principles of the oleomargarine case and one or two other cases. The Senator is aware of that?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is referring to the last "child-labor" case?

Mr. NELSON. I refer to the last "child-labor" decision.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. That decision practically overruled decisions which the court laid down in the oleomargarine case and one or two other cases which I can not at this moment recall.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Montana has just said that that case seems to him to overrule a long line of decisions, and I agree with the Senator from Montana about that; but we have not a taxing case here before us, and possibly we can get along without employing the taxing power.

I have described the foundation which I have attempted to put under this bill so far as it relates to the undue burden put upon commerce through unjust and unfair exactions in the price of coal. I regard that foundation as ample to sustain this structure, but there is another application of the authority given in the Constitution to regulate commerce among the States that I think is equally satisfactory.

All lawyers know the reasoning upon which the Supreme Court sustained the law which forbids the transportation of lottery tickets and lottery literature, and everything that pertains to an enterprise of that kind. The Louisiana Lottery was purely a Louisiana institution, and it disseminated its information and its invitations for the enterprise through the mails and through the channels and by the instrumentalities of interstate commerce. How did the Supreme Court find it possible to hold that the sending of a pamphlet concerning the Louisiana Lottery or any lottery upon an interstate train could be arrested and prevented through the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States? It did it because the effect of the lottery or the gambling enterprise which began in the State, and of which we would have had no jurisdiction if it had not extended beyond the State, was in fact extended throughout the United States, and the evil of gambling was stimulated and multiplied by the facilities which we furnished for the transportation of matter pertaining to the lottery; and so the lottery law was sustained. On what other theory than the one I have just mentioned could it have been sustained? It absolutely excluded from interstate commerce all these instrumentalities through which the lottery was carried on. Why, and under what power? Under the power to regulate commerce, and because of the character of the enterprise itself, and of the commodities or literature which were being carried in interstate commerce.

The Supreme Court possibly would not have excluded from interstate commerce a perfectly harmless bit of literature, or a perfectly innocent commodity; but it attached to the lottery in that case, as all civilized people will attach to it, a harm, an evil. Now, what of the overcharge for coal that begins at the mine? Does the overcharge for coal end with the State? Is its influence confined to the State? No. An overcharge for coal extends to every part of the Union. Wherever that coal goes, and wherever people are required to pay more than a fair and reasonable price for it, the evil influences and the evil consequences go. Why, therefore, has not Congress the same right to authorize the carriers to refuse to receive coal for which an unreasonable price is being charged, in order to protect the people, that it had to forbid the transportation of lottery tickets or lottery literature?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is undoubtedly correct. The Supreme Court not only in the lottery case, but also in the prohibition cases which arose before the constitutional amendment was adopted, and also, I think, in the case of the shipment of explosives by rail, held that the regulation of commerce might extend to absolute prohibition.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was about to mention the liquor cases. There was a time when liquor was a perfectly legitimate subject of transportation, when there were very many States in which it was entirely lawful to sell liquor, and yet Congress absolutely forbade the transportation of liquor under certain circumstances.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me ask if the logic of the lottery case and of the liquor case and of the narcotic drug act and all of those of similar character is not that Congress may prevent the transportation in interstate commerce of those things the sale or circulation of which the State may prohibit within its own borders?

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And is not that the distinction which must be drawn between the child-labor case and those cases? The Supreme Court said that the commodity produced by the labor of children is a perfectly harmless thing. It may, in itself, be even a beneficent thing and therefore it must pass in interstate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am going to read from the child-labor case in a moment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But in the lottery case the legislation prohibiting the transportation of that article in interstate commerce was founded upon the proposition that it was subject to police regulation in the State.

Mr. CUMMINS. So is coal sold at an extortionate price, subject to police regulation. That is to say, that is my view of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator can put those upon exactly the same basis, of course——

Mr. CUMMINS. The cases are unlike, but the principle upon which legislation may be founded is exactly the same.

Mr. President, take the pure food law. Congress became its own judge with regard to the commodities that might be transported from State to State. Congress laid down the criterion. Congress forbade the transportation into a State of many things which under the laws of that State were perfectly lawful to be dealt in in that State. Congress became its own judge with regard to the evil that might be accomplished by their transportation throughout the country. That is true of our liquor laws; that is true of our pure food law and pure drug law; and it is true of so many acts of Congress in which we have attempted to prevent interstate transportation that I need not recite them. And with regard to the power of taxation, who gave us the power to tax oleomargarine that is colored yellow 10 cents a pound? We did not exercise that power for the purpose of raising revenue. We exercised it for the purpose of suppressing and preventing the coloring of artificial butter so that the people of the country could be readily and easily deceived when it was offered for sale.

Now, I intend to refer for a moment to this case which gives so many good lawyers pause when they come to consider this question.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, before the Senator gets to that I am unable to follow him. Is it his contention that if a ton of coal costs less than $3 a ton there is no harm in transporting it, but that if it costs $15 a ton there is?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a great deal of harm. Yes; that is what I said. That is my position, that I would rather see a lottery ticket transported—I think it would do less harm to the community—than a ton of coal that is sold at three or four times a fair profit.

Mr. DIAL. I do not favor profiteering. I simply want to get at the real remedy.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the reasoning, and I am trying to reach for the profiteer, and I hope the Senator from South Carolina will help me.

You will all remember that Justice Day delivered the opinion in the first child-labor case; and he reviews these cases, and he attempts to withdraw the Hammer case, which is the child-labor case, from the operation of these prior decisions. He says—I am reading now from page 270:

> The first of these cases is Champion v. Ames (188 U. S. 321), the so-called Lottery case, in which it was held that Congress might pass a law having the effect to keep the channels of commerce free from use in the transportation of tickets used in the promotion of lottery schemes.

I have tried to show the parallel between lottery tickets and coal the price of which is intended to be an imposition and an unjust exaction upon the people, and to show that it falls within the same principle as the Lottery case.

> In Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States (220 U. S. 45) this court sustained the power of Congress to pass the pure food and drugs act, which prohibited the introduction into the States by means of interstate commerce of impure foods and drugs.

You all know that there are a great many things that are prohibited in the pure food law which people have been accustomed to consume from time immemorial and without very serious consequences to their health.

> In Hoke v. United States (227 U. S. 308) this court sustained the constitutionality of the so-called white slave traffic act—

Who ever thought in the old days that the power to regulate commerce among the States would be sufficient to prevent the transportation of women for immoral purposes? I have no doubt that would have seemed to the forefathers a perfect travesty upon the Constitution; and yet it has not only been sustained by the Supreme Court but it is believed by many people to be one of the most helpful laws which Congress has ever passed in the exercise of that power.

> In Caminetti v. United States (242 U. S. 470) we held that Congress might prohibit the transportation of women in interstate commerce for the purpose of debauchery and kindred purposes. In Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland Ry. Co. (242 U. S. 311) the power of Congress over the transportation of intoxicating liquors was sustained. In the course of the opinion it was said:
> "The power conferred is to regulate, and the very terms of the grant would seem to repel the contention that only prohibition of movement in interstate commerce was embraced. And the cogency of this is manifest, since if the doctrine were applied to those manifold and important subjects of interstate commerce as to which Congress from the beginning has regulated, not prohibited, the existence of government under the Constitution would be no longer possible."
> And, concluding the discussion which sustained the authority of the Government to prohibit the transportation of liquor in interstate commerce, the court said:
> "* * * The exceptional nature of the subject here regulated is the basis upon which the exceptional power exerted must rest, and affords no ground for any fear that such power may be constitutionally extended to things which it may not consistently with the guaranties of the Constitution embrace."

Just as the coal that is sold at an excessive price must be regarded as of an exceptional nature, and the provision in regard to it can be sustained upon exactly the same reasoning that sustained the prohibition against the transportation of liquor.

> In each of these instances the use of interstate transportation was necessary to the accomplishment of harmful results.

So it is with unduly high-price coal. The transportation is necessary before the person who seeks to exact undue prices from the people can accomplish his end. He must use transportation, and this bill is directed entirely against his use of the transportation. I read further from the opinion of the court:

> In other words, although the power over interstate transportation was to regulate, that could only be accomplished by prohibiting the use of the facilities of interstate commerce to effect the evil intended.

If it is an evil to extort from the people an unjust price for this necessary commodity, then we bring this case exactly within the reasoning which the court in the child-labor case has indulged in up to this moment. Let us see further. Then Justice Day proceeds:

> This element is wanting in the present case.

What element? That is, the accomplishment of an evil result by and through transportation. I continue reading:

> The thing intended to be accomplished by this statute is the denial of the facilities of interstate commerce to those manufacturers in the States who employ children within the prohibited ages. The act in its effect does not regulate transportaion among the States, but aims to standardize the ages at which children may be employed in mining and manufacturing within the States. The goods shipped are of themselves harmless.

Mr. President, is that true of the present case? The commodity is just the same, but it can not be said that the distortion of the commerce of the United States is not affected by the carriage of coal sold under these circumstances. I read further:

> The act permits them to be freely shipped after 30 days from the time of their removal from the factory. When offered for shipment, and before transportation begins, the labor of their production is over, and the mere fact that they were intended for interstate commerce transportation does not make their production subject to Federal control under the commerce power.

Mr. President, I will read no more of this opinion. It has been read by every lawyer in the Senate many times. I have studied it myself very carefully, and while I would not have either the Senate or the country understand that the reasoning of the court has convinced my judgment, yet it is easy for me to perceive the wide distinction between that case and the present one.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I submit this matter for the determination of the Senate. I believe that during the next three months, or the next six months, the Government can protect the people of this country from a grievous imposition through the power given or attempted to be given in this bill. I have no words which can adequately describe the indignation I feel when I observe coal operators or coal dealers taking advantage, or attempting to take advantage, of a most unfortunate situation, in which there must be shortage of coal for several months to come, in the endeavor to overcharge those who must consume coal to keep themselves warm during the coming winter, and to prevent those hardships which are crowding so fast upon great communities of the United States; and if there is any way within the purview of the Constitution in which we can save them from the disaster which is falling so rapidly upon them I want to take that way, and I am willing to risk the constitutionality of the measure that is now before the Senate, and which I have proposed as a substitute for the bill as it passed the House.

I will say just one word more. This morning the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], being compelled to leave the city, received unanimous consent to introduce an amendment to the Senate committee bill which he had proposed to offer to the commission bill. I am very familiar with the amendment, and there is not a thing in it to which I object. I do not think it has a proper place in this bill, but I do not intend to make a fight against it, for I am in sympathy with everything it proposes, and the only reason I desire to suggest adverse to that amendment is that it ought to be made the subject of an independent bill rather than to be attached as an amendment to this bill. But if the Senate desires to make it a part of this measure I shall not urge any objection.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word, not in discussing the constitutional phases of this question at all but to emphasize the need for some such legislation as is provided for in the pending bill. I may say that I deeply regret the necessity of having proposed legislation of this kind before the Senate at this time. What I shall say, and what I shall read, will in the main be corroborative of the statements made by the Senator from Minnesota in regard to the great need of the Northwest country.

I read first a paragraph from a letter of date August 31, from Mr. Donald D. Conn, chairman of the Governors' Committee of the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana. Mr. Conn says in this short paragraph:

> I can not impress upon you too strongly the necessity of including some provision in the bill which will give the Federal body control over this lake distribution. The bill should be passed at once, or the Northwest will not obtain their coal.

I understand that an amendment will be offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] which will make certain the right on the part of the commission to control lake distribution, it not being quite apparent from the bill that the Interstate Commerce Commission has such power.

To show further the necessity of some action in getting coal to the Northwest, I read now a paragraph from a letter received from Mr. John Valentine, secretary of the Commercial Club of Huron, near the central part of the State of South Dakota. It reads in part:

In our opinion, South Dakota is in the most precarious position of any other State and would suffer most if anything resembling a coal famine should happen. This is because we have no coal of our own, we are a long distance by rail from the great producing areas, and also because we have not even wood to burn in case of necessity. Within 30 days coal will be needed to heat the homes of our people, and unless steps are taken now to bring the coal into the State, we incur the greatest danger of actual suffering of our people, as well as curtailment of industries.

In addition to this, I received this morning a letter from one of the judges of our supreme court, in which he says:

I am getting very anxious about the coal situation. It looks to me as though, even with the most prompt and drastic action that could be taken, there is bound to be a large amount of suffering through lack of fuel in the Northwest. I do not believe now that the roads can get the coal here fast enough, even if the winter should be comparatively open; and if we should have an old-fashioned severe winter I do not know what would happen. There is practically no fuel to be had.

* * * * * * *

If an emergency ever existed, it seems to me it exists now in the coal situation.

* * * * * * *

Can not something be done to relieve the situation? The people are, I believe, becoming very much aroused over it.

That is from the Hon. Carl G. Sherwood, who, as I stated, is one of the judges of our supreme court.

One further quotation will fitly express my sympathy with that provision of the bill which will enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to deny the use of cars to coal operators who persist in charging exorbitant rates for the coal. This discloses the need of our people for coal at a reasonable price. They are not in a situation to pay exorbitant prices.

Referring to some remarks made the other day on the bonus bill, I quote from a letter from which I read at that time. The letter was written August 21, 1922, and is from the president of the State Bankers' Association of South Dakota. He says as follows:

To-day oats are worth 17 cents, barley 29 cents, rye 47 cents, mixed durum around 60 cents, and hard wheat 90 cents. You can readily see that spells the same thing it did last year.

So there is a picture, and a pretty graphic one, I think, of our necessities in regard to the shipment of coal to our part of the country and the furnishing of that coal to the consumers at a reasonable price.

The constitutional phases of the question have been very ably discussed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] as well, and I forbear further discussion of that aspect of the case at the present time.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have listened to the argument of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] with a great deal of interest. It was clear and able, as usual, but I was unable to follow him to his conclusion. I regret that I am constrained to differ with him in his conclusions of law. Of course it goes without saying that none of us favor profiteering. We are all trying to work to the same end, but the question is how to get results. No one has a greater contempt than I for people who will take advantage of unforeseen conditions to profiteer, but I do not believe we are going to attain the desired end by legislation.

It seems from the argument of the Senator from Iowa that certain goods made by certain individuals would be prohibited from shipment in interstate commerce. There is nothing per se wrong in those goods. It is simply Congress trying to undertake to do indirectly what everyone knows it could not do directly, however commendable the object sought, as it is commendable here. I can not see any difference between that case and the present case. Court decisions have been cited, such as the narcotic case, the Louisiana lottery case, the alcohol case, and cases of that kind, but the articles there involved were injurious per se. So far as liquor goes that was prohibited by constitutional amendment. But I can not distinguish the harm in carrying a ton of coal that costs one price as against a ton that costs a different price. I can not see how we are going to arrive at that difference. If it cost $3 a ton there is no harm in carrying it, while if it cost $10 a ton it would be a great wrong and would be injurious to the producer and to interstate commerce. I do not think the framers of the Constitution ever dreamed of such a construction of the Constitution. Congress denying to coal the right of shipment in interstate commerce is clearly an attempt to fix prices, a thing that Congress could not do directly, saying that coal should not be sold at more than a certain price per ton or to establish some agency to ascertain a reasonable price for the coal. I do not know of any right of the States to fix the price of a commodity much less of Congress to do so, however desirable it might be under certain circumstances.

So we resolve ourselves down now to the practical question. We are trying to get results. I confess that the matter has given me a great deal of concern. I have been very much interested in it because 15 per cent of the population of my State are employed in cotton mills and a very large number of those mills are dependent upon coal to operate. In fact they are, in a measure, all dependent upon coal to operate. Besides, the operation of those mills makes the market not only for our cotton but a market for our other products, and when our mills shut down great distress will ensue in my section of the country. Hence I am exceedingly anxious and I try to be alert to keep the mills going and to render every assistance I can to that end.

Some time ago we foresaw the result that the mills would have to shut down, so about the middle of August I wrote Mr. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, and told him I understood he was trying to establish a fuel distribution agency to control the shipment of coal, and so forth, and asked him if he would kindly refer me to his authority for so doing. I remembered, of course, that during the war we had some such agency, but my recollection was that we repealed that law after the war, and that we had gotten back to pre-war or normal conditions, as we thought and as we hoped. I received a letter from Mr. Hoover on the 16th of August. I hardly think Mr. Hoover read the letter before he signed it, if he signed it at all, or that whoever signed it in his office read it, because it is a little bit childish, and I do not think Mr. Hoover has so far lost his equilibrium as to sign so nonsensical a letter. However, being so anxious that the coal strike should be settled, I did not make it public, nor did I reply to his letter.

I understood the President was going to address Congress, and my interest was not in strikes, but in the people carrying on the industries of the country. I have no objection to people quitting work when their term is up if they want to quit. On the other hand, I strongly favor letting every man work who wants to work.

When the President addressed Congress he stated, according to my recollection, that the Government had no authority to do what they were doing at that time so far as fuel distribution was concerned. I am glad that the fuel strike is over, and I hope that we may never have any more such strikes in the country. My advice to those people, if I should be allowed to give any advice, would be to sit down and talk the matter over, the employers and the employees, and always settle their differences, whatever they may be, in that peaceable way.

The matter has become more acute in my State. I have received numerous telegrams from mill operators, one in particular from a very large mill in my State, perhaps the largest mill in the world under one roof. I have a copy of the telegram before me. That mill had to shut down because of lack of coal, which threw 4,000 people out of employment. This particular mill had a contract with a mine, and after various letters and telegrams my advice to the mill was to stand on the contract and demand delivery. The price was reasonable and the coal had been delivered prior to that time. Following my advice, they made that demand on the coal-mine operators. The operators replied that they could not get cars in which to deliver the coal, that they were ready to carry out their contract if they were allowed to ship, but that through Mr. Hoover's agency priority orders had been issued, and that cotton mills were placed in class 5, which I believe is at the foot of the list, and coal could not be delivered. Hence that mill was shut down, and other mills have been shut down since, and there was great probability that many more would be shut down.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator knows that Mr. Hoover did not issue those orders. Those orders were issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. DIAL. I shall come to that in a little bit. I have a letter from Mr. Hoover.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator mean the letter of September 1?

Mr. DIAL. Yes. I am taking the matter up logically. I shall refer to that in a little bit.

About that stage of the matter I had the mill president, the coal purchaser for all the mills in my State, the fuel distributor, who was chairman of the railroad commission of South Carolina, and the mine operators come to Washington and we had a conference. We went at the matter not with any hot-air proposition, but in an endeavor to get at it in a businesslike way. We sat down around a table trying to get the matter adjusted. The mine operator said he was satisfied with his contract and that he had plenty of coal and plenty of labor, and was ready to fill the contract if he could get cars; that cars had been furnished him to fill priority orders, but that he was unable to get cars to furnish us with coal. I arranged for a conference with Mr. Spencer, who was fuel distributor here, and sent the gentlemen up to see him. I am sorry to state that while up to the present time they have not got the matter fully adjusted, yet in the last few days they have disbanded, priority orders are no longer issued, and they are now not interfered with, but we have not got the coal matter straightened out.

On the floor of the Senate about a week ago I referred to this matter briefly, and referred to Mr. Hoover. On September 1 I received a letter from him, to which I have not yet replied. In the letter Mr. Hoover said:

> My attention has been called to your statement in the Senate yesterday.

This is what he said I said, and I did say it:

> I should like to have some one inform me, if he can, by what authority Mr. Hoover changed the price of coal. In my State I have constituents who are large consumers of coal. They have contracts by the year with the mines, and my information from the mine operators is that they are willing to deliver the coal at the contract price, which is, for these large quantities, $1.90 per ton. Some time ago, I understand, Mr. Hoover fixed a price of $3.50 a ton at the mines as a reasonable price.

Mr. Hoover then continues in his letter to me:

> It appears to me that you have not understood the arrangements made. In the first instance a voluntary agreement was entered into between myself and a majority of the southern bituminous operators that they should not charge more than the Garfield prices plus their expenses since the Garfield scale. This averaged something less than $3.25 for southern coal, and applied solely to free or spot coal and had no relationship whatever to contract coal. No authority existed, nor has any attempt ever been made by this department to interfere in contracts, and therefore if your constituent was working under contract coal this arrangement in no way affected him. The value to the public of this arrangement is proved by the price of coal from $6 to $12 made by the minority who refused to cooperate.
> The difficulties over contracts which you mention may have arisen after the 1st of August, when the Interstate Commerce Commission, in order to secure supplies for urgent public utilities issued priorities which in effect displaced all contract coal for industries lower in the priority list. This is not a matter for which this department is responsible; however, it was an urgent necessity, unless public utilities of the country were to be closed, and direct authority in law exists for such action.

As I understand from Mr. Hoover's letter, there is no authority in his department to fix the price of coal or to interfere with the distribution of coal at all, but that it was done through the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that there is authority of law to that effect and for that purpose.

Mr. KELLOGG. They gave priorities simply in the use of cars.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; and I shall come to that in a moment. Mr. Hoover went on further in his letter to say:

> With the general resumption of mining in the union fields at the end of last week, it had not been necessary to place so large a burden upon the southern mines for the purpose of public utilities, and it is probable that your constituent's contract could be resumed; in any event, no act of mine prevents it.
> In view of the misimpression your statement has created, it would seem to me fair that you correct it in an early issue of the RECORD.
> Yours, faithfully,
> HERBERT HOOVER.

I did not desire the other day to do Mr. Hoover any injustice, and I do not desire to do so now. In fact, I would prefer to refrain from mentioning the name of anyone who is not on the floor of the Senate. However, I do not think I did Mr. Hoover any injustice, and I certainly did not intend to do him one. I think his letter bears out my contention instead of contradicting it. What I am trying to get is a correct solution of the situation. It is simply a business matter with me, because it is a matter of paramount importance to our people in my State not only every day but every hour as well as in the entire South. The matter now comes down to the point of where the trouble really lies, and shows it is not a question of coal or quantity of coal or labor but that it is a question of transportation. I must repeat what I stated the other day, that I do not know of any authority for Mr. Hoover to have done what he did. No doubt he intended to prevent profiteering in coal, and that is to be commended.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Hoover got the coal operators to limit their price for coal to a maximum of $3.25 a ton at a time when they could have obtained $6, $7, or $8 a ton; but it was all done through voluntary action. Will the Senator tell me what harm there was in that?

Mr. DIAL. I will tell the Senator in a moment. It would, perhaps, have been commendable for Mr. Hoover to have undertaken to do that, although I do not know that it was any of his business particularly to go into that matter. However, it would have been commendable in him, so far as trying to get coal for certain people is concerned, but when through the machinery set up by the Fuel Administration priority orders are given, and the Interstate Commerce Commission will not allow the mines to ship coal on contracts, then Mr. Hoover has injured us, though he may have benefited other people. That is my complaint.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator again yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Would it be any worse for the manufacturing industries in the Senator's State to close down for the want of coal than for industries in my State to close down, as they have closed down, for the same reason, in order to supply coal to the railroads and public utilities, which it is necessary should be operated?

Mr. DIAL. I should much prefer to have the manufacturing industries close down in the Senator's State than to have the manufacturing industries close down in my State.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no doubt the Senator would; but would the Senator say that it was better for the railroads and public utilities to close down and to have the manufacturing industries operated?

Mr. DIAL. Well, as to the public utilities, it depends upon how far the Senator would desire to go.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then, I will say the railroads?

Mr. DIAL. I had rather close down some railroads and have some trains on those roads discontinued than to let my people suffer by reason of the shutting down of manufacturing industries.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say further that some trains have been discontinued.

Mr. DIAL. I think some trains ought to be discontinued.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DIAL. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. As I understand, the Senator from South Carolina seeks to know where Mr. Hoover got the authority which he has been exercising?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Hoover did not exercise such authority; it was the Interstate Commerce Commission that issued the orders for the use of cars. Mr. Hoover made no orders whatever.

Mr. DIAL. But did not Mr. Hoover issue the orders of priority?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; he did not issue the priority orders.

Mr. DIAL. Did he not arrange matters so that the priority orders could be issued?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, sir; the priorities are stated in the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission and named in those orders themselves.

Mr. DIAL. What is the function, then, of the coal administrator? What does he do?

Mr. KELLOGG. He simply advises the coal operator not to increase his price beyond a certain figure, and gives the Interstate Commerce Commission information.

Mr. DIAL. He does not fix priorities?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, sir. The priorities are named in the orders of the commission itself, as the Senator will see if he will look at them.

Mr. DIAL. Very well.

Mr. KELLOGG. They are not Mr. Hoover's orders at all, for he never issued a priority order.

Mr. DIAL. I do not see what he had to do with it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have the orders here, if the Senator would like to look over them.

Mr. DIAL. I do not care about that; I have too many here; in fact, I have so many of them that I have not been able to read all of them. I have one here numbered 23, I believe, on the subject.

Mr. President, the point I am making is that when one interested in the matter comes to Washington he is compelled to go from one office to another. It will take him a good long time to find the right place at which to get the information. It takes an expert to handle a matter of that kind. A man from the mining section of the country can not do it. I spent about a week in telephoning from the car-service man to the Interstate Commerce Commission and up to Mr. Hoover's office and back to Mr. Spencer's office, all on the upper side of town, and I hardly know whether I have got the matter straightened out right yet or not. However, they have abandoned the priority orders, I was informed this morning—I believe by Mr. Spencer's office, though I do not know how that may be. I do not want to do Mr. Hoover any injustice; it is commendable, of course, for him to try to keep the price of coal down; but, on the other hand, it is not commendable in him to encourage those who are under contract to deliver coal to violate their contracts. I do not believe in individuals violating their contracts without just cause, excuse, and reason. Neither do I believe in the United States Government violating contracts or taking action which will result in individuals repudiating their contracts.

The Interstate Commerce Commission plays "hide and seek" and denies sometimes that they have this authority and sometimes they claim to have it; but I do not think anybody has come to a correct conclusion on that proposition.

I have a very voluminous correspondence here, and I am not able yet to get their exact view on it; but I am told that there is nothing to prevent the mines from carrying out their contracts and shipping coal to us. Mr. Hoover says so, and that is all I want; but, whether the contracts are interfered with directly or indirectly, the result is the same so far as the people in my State are concerned.

It sets a bad example, a bad precedent, to send cars to a mine to ship coal out on some other order at a much higher price than to carry out their contract to deliver to those to whom they have been delivering and with whom they have yearly contracts. I do not think it is good morals, and I do not think it is good policy for the Government to encourage anything of that kind.

The Interstate Commerce Commission claim that they are willing that the contracts should be carried out, but they are not being carried out, and my people are not getting the coal. We are hopeful that conditions are improving, but within the last hour I have seen a telegram saying that the congestion was getting very bad, indeed, in certain sections. The other day they had some thirteen hundred loaded cars right at the gateway of our State which could not be moved, and the telegram which I saw a while ago says, I think, that there are probably now some sixteen hundred or eighteen hundred.

So, Mr. President, whatever legislation we may enact here, if we are going to pass any at all, ought to be along business lines; it ought to be practical; but I can not get my mind to believe that the remedy is an embargo. We do not want the transportation of less coal, but we want the transportation of more coal. The only final solution of it is going to be to mine more coal, get the cars in which to ship it, send those cars to their destination, unload them as quickly as possible, and send them back, and hereafter let our people use a little forethought and get in their supply of coal early in the spring and not wait until the congested conditions are brought about.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. DIAL. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMITH. I have seen the statement in the press within the last day or so that there is practically enough coal in sight to meet the ordinary necessities both of manufacturing concerns and public utilities, as well as private use, and that the problem now is motive force or transportation facilities to get the coal to those who need it.

Mr. DIAL. Absolutely; and I should much prefer that some of the public utilities, some of the street car lines, for instance, should not have coal if their having it will close down some of our mills. Then the people could walk and have a little exercise; they would be in better health, and I think that would be conducive to the public good.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that in view of the fact that for five months only about 50 per cent of the normal supply of coal has been transported because there was not any being produced at the mines, if the railroads could transport to their reasonable ordinary capacity they could not in the next few months make up the deficiency in the country. Certainly the Senator would not claim that a priority should not be issued to keep the railroads running when they are moving the food of the country?

Mr. SMITH. The point that I should like to have cleared up in my mind, if my colleague will allow me, is this: Say there is a sufficient amount of coal being mined and ready for transportation. We all know that what is called an "ordinary supply" implies that a certain amount is stored, so that the term covers not only what a given concern may consume within 24 hours or 48 hours or a week, perhaps, but a supply sufficient to carry them over for a considerable period. Is it not possible for our present transportation facilities to be so adjusted as to meet the daily needs of practically all consumers and then gradually increase the storage?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; it is not; that is the trouble; that is what the Interstate Commerce Commission are trying to do. The priority orders, for instance, for the movement of coal for public utilities have been issued because their supply is practically exhausted. Some of the railroads are within a week and others within two weeks of closing down. There are not sufficient transportation facilities to supply all the needs of the country because the reserve stocks have been exhausted. That is the reason why public utilities are put in a class which is given priority in the use of coal cars. I think, although the production of the mines and transportation facilities are not as yet normal, that in a short time they are going to be able to supply the immediate necessities of the public utilities.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me further——

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. We all know the experience we had during the period of the war, especially during one severe winter. The condition confronting us can not possibly parallel that, because——

Mr. KELLOGG. It is worse.

Mr. SMITH. It can not be as bad, for this reason, that we were at war and vast quantities of our coal were used for bunkering our ships and other ships that touched at our ports. Perhaps as much was used for that purpose as was used in this country.

Mr. KELLOGG. More.

Mr. SMITH. More was used for that purpose.

Mr. KELLOGG. But we were moving it then.

Mr. SMITH. I understand that. We have now added to our facilities what was then subtracted from them in order to meet war necessities and to carry other commodities for war purposes, and furthermore, now everything is approximately normal so far as our necessities are concerned; so that I do not see why our available facilities, which did in a measure, without entailing death and starvation, meet the conditions that existed in 1917 and 1918, can not meet the present situation in practically an adequate manner.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not the Senator know that for five months we have only been producing 50 per cent of the coal normally needed by the country?

Mr. SMITH. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well. Does the Senator think that deficiency can be made up in a week or ten days or two weeks?

Mr. SMITH. No; but my idea is that if we could get the transportation facilities sufficiently mobilized and move the coal——

Mr. KELLOGG. The commission is trying to mobilize transportation facilities to its utmost extent to move coal everywhere.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, just for information, then, why did the commission the other day withdraw 34,000 cars, according to the Senator from Missouri, from the coal business?

Mr. KELLOGG. Because they were principally open-top cars that were not efficient in carrying coal, and for another reason: Here is the beet crop of the country, that will rot unless it is moved right now, and they have to have some cars; and they can use cars that are not proper for moving coal for moving the beet crop. The commission is doing the best it can with this problem.

Talk about contracts: Many, many contracts in my country have been shut off because they could not get the coal, and the coal is being shipped to public utilities. Electric-light plants in some 216 cities that I showed to-day are within two weeks of closing down.

Mr. DIAL. Answering my colleague further about these cars, one of the misfortunes of these priority orders, if the Senator will excuse me for a personal allusion, is this: The other day Mr. Shealey, whom my colleague knows very well, the chairman of the South Carolina Railroad Commission and the fuel distributor of South Carolina, who was up here trying to straighten out this matter, telephoned me that there were 400 loaded cars of coal on the track that had been exempted under a prior order, but since the strike was about settled that coal could be had for our district. However, they wanted $6 a ton instead of the contract price.

Mr. SMITH. Where did the coal come from?

Mr. DIAL. I could not say positively about it, but it was down in our territory, and it had not gone north. It had been preexempted to go north, but had not gone, and on account of the opening up of the mines it was not needed, and they wanted to turn it back provided our constituents would pay $6 a ton for it. There were 400 cars of it.

Mr. SMITH. Did the coal come from the companies or from the mines with which you had made the contract?

Mr. DIAL. I could not say as to that. It was in that territory; but they are practically all under contract down there.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator that coal is selling in my State for $10 and $15 a ton; and I will say to the Senator further that the hardships to the manufacturers in his State that he is talking of are nothing to the hardships which the people themselves are going to suffer this fall and winter in the North. I am sure the commission are doing their very best to supply all parts of the country with transportation, but there is not enough to go around immediately.

Mr. DIAL. Then they ought to shut one eye to defective cars, and let the cars go on if they can run, and just go along in the usual way until we can get conditions relieved a little bit, and not be too exacting.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think they have been very exacting.

Mr. DIAL. I do not know that they have been, but I just throw out that suggestion.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator knows that the labor unions have made complaints about equipment not being in shape. I do not know, of course, about the merits of those complaints.

Mr. DIAL. In the case of the same mill about which I have been speaking, the president of that mill the other day bought 10 cars which he thought were suitable to handle coal, and sent them to the mines, and they refused to load those cars. He thought he would furnish his own cars and get his coal. He is a man of large means, and he thought he would get coal in that way. I know him well. They refused to load coal into those cars; so I think they are a little too exacting. They had better go along and use the machinery they have until the situation can be relieved a little.

Mr. SMITH. Who refused to load the coal in the cars?

Mr. DIAL. Either the mines or the railroads. Mr. Spring, the president of the mill, bought 10 cars that he thought were suitable for that purpose, and sent the cars up to the mines, and they refused to load them.

Mr. President, I realize that this is a difficult proposition. I was on a committee here some time ago which investigated the mining of coal a little. I will be candid in saying that I do not know much about mining coal. We have no mines in my State, and I have only been in a few mines in my life; but, as I look at it, the great trouble is that there is no way to store the coal. They have to have cars to transport it as it is mined, if it is to be done efficiently; and these modern mines, I am told, can not even load coal in box cars. Their dumping facilities are not suited to it. They have to have a certain kind of car. That is one of the great troubles, that they are not furnished with suitable cars at the proper time. There is no place to store up coal, as there is in the case of nearly every other commodity in the world. Therefore it is a difficult matter to have people look ahead and provide for their needs.

I do not want our friends up in the Northwest to get chilly this winter, but I hope that hereafter they will lay in a supply a little bit earlier. I hope they will follow the example of the squirrels, and prepare for winter in the summer time. We get a sort of command to that effect, or at least an example of it, in the Bible in the parable about the virgins, where they did not get their lamps filled with oil, and trimmed and burning; and they will have to do better on a business proposition.

Mr. President, I can not see how we are going to benefit this proposition by passing legislation. I think it will be a sad day when we lodge in any body of men the right to say that one car of a given commodity shall go forward and another car of the same kind of commodity shall not.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator know that that power is in the law now, and had been exercised for years? We are not changing the law in that regard.

Mr. DIAL. Then you do not need any more law. What do you want of this bill, then?

Mr. KELLOGG. I have explained why we need the additional power.

Mr. DIAL. I do not want to give it to you if you have not got it. I do not want to give you any more power. You have a little too much now.

Mr. President, I feel that we should encourage production. If we have a right to fix the price of a commodity by law directly I am ready to vote for it, but I do not know of any such national law, and I do not know of any such law even in the States. I wish they had some such law, but I am not willing to try to do indirectly something which I do not think is constitutional and which I do not think we can do directly. I do not believe in holding out false hopes to the people. I think we might just as well let them have bad news. If the bad news has to go forth, let them have it, and let them get prepared for it.

I confess that I have a bad taste in my mouth toward turning over business to Government agencies. There are usually people in those positions who have not made much of a success of their lives and they want shorter hours and more pay and a little less work and a little more red tape. To my mind it will increase the cost of production and the cost of living, and it will annoy business until a man would almost prefer to break and go out of business than to try to continue under so many restrictions and regulations. I think that is one of the great troubles now; one thing that retards the prosperity of the country. We hardly know under what law we are operating. We do not know when business is going to be hauled up and jerked around and perhaps fined, criticized, and one thing and another.

So I do not see any good in this legislation. I think perhaps the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] possesses merit, and probably it would do very well to strike out both this bill and the bill that is proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and substitute the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and if people are going to profiteer and rob the people let the world know it and bring public sentiment to bear against it. But I can not see how it is illegal to transport a car of coal if it costs one price and legal to transport it if it costs another price. I can not get that through my head this afternoon. Possibly upon reflection and a little more consideration I might discriminate, but I am unable to do so now. Therefore I think we ought just to say: "Get busy, boys, and fix up these cars and haul them right quick and unload them," and let the Government not interfere with people carrying out their contracts.

Any legislation that is proposed here, if any should pass—and I am going to vote against it all I think—should have a provision in it that vested rights and contract rights are not to be interfered with. I hope that our friends who favor prosperity and enterprise and employment in this country will help me, and see if we can not get in that kind of a provision—that whatever rights may be given anybody, if we give them any, they have no right to divest contract rights. People who go along and make contracts and get ready ought to be served, and it is not fair and not conducive to the upbuilding of this country to subject business to the uncertainty that would result from any other course.

Mr. President, I heard a man talking on this subject the other night, a brick manufacturer. He had already sold his product. He had a contract for his coal and had sold his brick. He expected to get his coal at a certain price. Now the price has changed and he could not be supplied and he was begging to get the coal at all, and he would lose money of course on the whole output of his manufacturing enterprise. That is true in a good many other cases. Take the cotton mills. They make their contracts for coal by the year and they sell their goods ahead accordingly, and they figure out all those things; and if you go to change it now you will disrupt business to a very great extent.

I do not see any necessity for the passage of this bill and I think we had better just vote it down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the substitute amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, it being to add to the proposed substitute the following section:

SEC. 7. All persons, firms, and corporations engaged in taking coal deposits from the ground or recovering coal from culm banks, slack piles, or other sources for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce shall be known as producers.

All persons, firms, and corporations engaged in buying and selling in interstate or foreign commerce coal in carload or greater than carload lots shall be known as wholesalers.

All producers shall on the first and fifteenth days of each calendar month transmit by mail to the Department of Commerce of the United States a sworn statement showing the following facts:

First. The amount of coal by them produced for the 15 days preceding the issuance of said statement.

Second. The price per ton for the various grades received by them at the mine.

Third. The amount of such coal shipped direct to retail distributors and the amount to the wholesale dealers and the amount sold directly to consumers, together with the prices in each instance received.

Fourth. The percentage the production bears to the capacity production of the mine as rated by the carriers serving the mine.

Fifth. The causes for failure to operate the mine at full production capacity and the percentage of reduction due to each of the several causes assigned.

The wholesalers of coal shall, on the first and fifteenth days of each calendar month transmit by mail to the Department of Commerce of the United States a sworn statement showing the following facts:

First. The amount of coal by them purchased and the prices paid for the various grades; the amount of coal by them sold to retailers and the prices received for the various grades; the amount of coal by them sold directly to consumers and the prices received for the various grades.

Second. The statement shall disclose whether the coal so shipped in interstate or foreign commerce was contract coal or spot coal, and if contract coal the date the contract was entered into.

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to require such statements to be made upon forms designated by him, and he may require such additional information as may be necessary to carry out fully the purposes of this section.

The Secretary of Commerce shall give publicity to the facts disclosed by such statements in such form as will most adequately advise the public of the prices paid at the mine and the prices charged by the wholesalers. He shall furnish to any consumer upon request a copy of said statements or of any part thereof.

Failure or refusal by any producer or wholesaler to prepare and transmit a true statement as herein required shall be unlawful; and such failure or refusal, as the same applies to each semimonthly statement above described, shall be deemed a separate offense; and the person, firm, or corporation so failing or refusing shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each offense, to be recovered in civil action brought by the United States.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] asked the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to look after that amendment. I see that the Senator from North Carolina is absent; and in his absence I believe I will ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment was rejected, and wait until the Senator from North Carolina comes in.

Mr. CURTIS. He can offer it in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, of course, can be offered in the Senate.

Mr. DIAL. Very well; I will withdraw the request, then.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in line 3 on page 5 of the Senate substitute for the pending bill I move that the two words "one year" be stricken out and the words "six months" be substituted therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia proposes an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "one year" and insert "six months."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, so far as I have a right to express an opinion about it, I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I move further to perfect the amendment of the Senator from Iowa by adding, after the word "carrier" in line 16, page 2, the following words:

Including vessels suitable for transportation of coal on the inland waters of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which will be stated by the Secretary.

Mr. KELLOGG. It would then read:

That the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, including the transportation act, 1920, and especially under section 402 of said transportation act, 1920, are, during the aforesaid emergency, enlarged to include the authority to issue in interstate transportation of coal or other fuel orders for priorities, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier, including vessels suitable for transportation of coal on the inland waters of the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Are the vessels on the Lakes under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. KELLOGG. Some of them are and some are not. Wherever they form a part of a through transportation line, they are; but nearly all of them are engaged in interstate commerce, carrying coal for outside concerns.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not object to the amendment, and it is not within my jurisdiction; it is the Senator's own part of the country. All I want to suggest is that if the Lakes are not within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission now, not being within the power of the interstate commerce act, it seems to me it would require more language than the Senator has proposed to make his amendment effectual. I do not think you could bring them within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission by simply trying to apply this act to them, if they are not already within its power.

Mr. LENROOT. Why not? The paragraph itself is limited to interstate commerce.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I am not saying you have not authority to bring them within the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but merely providing that in the shipment of coal priority shall be given, when there is no authority within the law to make them amenable to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it does not seem to me, would accomplish what you want. I am not saying this by way of objection to the amendment. If you want to put it in, I have no objection; but I do not believe you have enough language to effectuate the purpose.

Mr. KELLOGG. It may be that the amendment would have to be enlarged; but the only object is to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power, during this emergency, the six months or the year this bill will be in force, to extend those priorities to the vessels mentioned. They take coal at Lake Erie ports and sell it wherever they get the biggest price for it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not raising this by way of objection, but simply to relieve the situation. How are you going to issue an order to a concern over which you have no jurisdiction?

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not this create jurisdiction?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it creates any jurisdiction. It takes more than that to create jurisdiction.

Mr. LENROOT. The language following what the Senator suggests could be made to read as follows:

Which, for such purpose, shall be subject to the interstate commerce act.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will accept that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not sure that that language will cure the defect. At any rate, it will carry it to conference; and that is probably what you are trying to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 16, after the word "carrier" insert:

Including vessels suitable for transportation of coal on the inland waters of the United States, which, for such purpose, shall be subject to the interstate commerce act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I propose the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment:

The READING CLERK. After section 4, on page 4, line 22, add a new section as follows, changing the numbers of the succeeding sections:

SEC. 5. Nothing herein shall be construed as affecting valid existing contracts in effect prior to the date of the passage of this act, nor shall car service be denied to any person or corporation because of any prices named in any such preexisting contract.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, that would render the whole act absolutely ineffective and take away the power the commission now has of giving priority for the use of cars. There would be nothing left of the act at all.

Mr. SMITH. May we have the proposed amendment to the amendment read again?

The amendment to the amendment was again read.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I simply want to reiterate what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has said. If that amendment is adopted the bill may as well be defeated, for while it might not cover every transaction to which the bill reaches it would so impair its effectiveness that I would see little use for the adoption of the measure to meet the present emergency.

The first clause in the amendment is, of course, mere surplusage. This act does not affect any contract made between an operator and a consumer or a dealer. It does not pretend to affect any contract. It could not affect any contract. This act is directed solely to the carriers. Therefore, the first part of the amendment is of no value at all to anybody. But the second part of it says to the Interstate Commerce Commission that they can not deny cars to any mine operator because they may believe that the contract price is more than a reasonable price. That might result in denying cars to mines which were willing to sell at a fair price and supplying cars to mines which were selling at an unfair price.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment reads "valid existing contracts in effect prior to the date of the passage of this act." So that it will take cognizance only of contracts which exist at the time of the passage of this act. If two parties have agreed, one to sell and the other to buy coal at what they believe to be a fair price, then even though some clerk in the office of the Interstate Commerce Commission may think the price is 25 cents higher than it ought to be, car service can not be denied to the person or corporation contracting.

Mr. CUMMINS. This act is not to be executed by any clerk in the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a very serious matter, and it will undoubtedly, in its execution, be administered by a responsible part of the commission itself. But this amendment simply proposes that if there are not cars enough to distribute the coal which operators and dealers are willing to sell at a fair price, then the carriers must furnish cars to operators, who are insisting upon an unfair price, and allow the coal which can be sold and will be sold and distributed at a fair price to remain unmined or at the mouth of the mine without cars to distribute it. I very earnestly hope that the amendment to the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. DIAL. I would call the Senator's attention to the fact that this amendment simply seeks to have men carry out their contracts. It does not change the contracts at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. The public welfare is infinitely superior to the private interests of any concern, whether that concern be an operator or a consumer, and if there are not cars enough to deliver all the coal which may be mined and which may be under contract, then I for one am in favor of distributing that coal to those people who need it most and at a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. DIAL. Then the Senator agrees to violate contracts by legislative action?

Mr. CUMMINS. We are not disturbing the contracts.

Mr. DIAL. That is what you would do.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the carrier can secure cars with which to move his unreasonably priced coal, that can be done. This is merely a question of priority.

Mr. DIAL. You would not expect the miner to lessen the price. Under this bill the tendency would be to increase the prices of coal. All this amendment does is to provide that contracts may be carried out.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not interested in carrying out contracts. I am interested in furnishing coal at a fair price to the people of this country who will need coal during the coming winter. That is my interest in this legislation. If the Senator from South Carolina knows of any person who has bought coal at an unreasonably high price, even though he may have been under the necessity to do it, I am not in favor of limiting or taking away the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to say that the reasonably priced coal shall be moved first.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, this is the first time in my life I have ever heard of a legislative body proposing to annul contracts.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the interpretation which the Senator from South Carolina puts upon it.

Mr. DIAL. That would be the result of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. This does not annul any contract; but when we are experiencing a shortage of transportation—and we might as well recognize the fact that we are experiencing a very great shortage of transportation—and there are some operators who are willing to furnish coal at a fair price, enough of them to tax the energies and the capacity of all the transportation lines of the country, I believe that such coal should be moved in preference to the coal which the Senator has in mind. There must be somebody the Senator has in mind who has contracted for coal at an unfair price.

Mr. DIAL. This coal was contracted for at an exceedingly low price.

Mr. LENROOT. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The person the Senator has in mind would not be interfered with at all.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina, this amendment, in so far as it has any application at all, would apply only where the contract was at an unreasonably high price. It would have no effect upon the shipment of coal sold at a low price.

Mr. DIAL. I do not see it that way. All I want is to have the contracts carried out.

Mr. LENROOT. If it has that effect, it not only destroys this bill but destroys the existing power of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There can not be any question about that.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is what it is intended to do.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator evidently wants to destroy the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant priority, not based upon price alone but for any reason. If there be a contract existing, he would have them carry out that contract, no matter what the needs of the rest of the country are, and to that extent he would destroy not only this bill but he would destroy the existing law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin has misread the amendment, or, perhaps, has not heard it read. As I understand the amendment, it provides simply that there shall be no discrimination against a particular shipper because of some price which may have been fixed in a preexisting contract. It does not in any way cut down the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to classify consignees and to prefer one class over another.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I was replying to the argument of the Senator from South Carolina, in which he took the position that the purpose of the amendment was to enable those who had contracts, whether at a low price or a high price, to secure their coal under those contracts. I did not agree with him upon that. I said that the only effect of the amendment, in my judgment, would be to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to deny cars to a person who had a contract at an unreasonably high price, and would have no effect upon contracts at a low price or a price below the maximum which might be fixed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think that is so, and I believe that is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. But the effect of it would be, nevertheless, that if there is an existing contract to-day for coal at $10 a ton, which is $5 too much, we will say, the Interstate Commerce Commission would be compelled under the amendment to offer the same facilities to the profiteer charging $10 which it offers to the man who charges $5.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then the Senator thinks that if both the buyer and the seller are satisfied with the existing contract and are willing to carry it out, the Interstate Commerce Commission should step in and prevent it from being carried out because the price is higher than the commission thinks is fair?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I say the Interstate Commerce Commission should have the power to furnish the cars and the equipment to those who are selling at a reasonable price.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the fact that this is a bigger question than a question between the buyer and the seller of coal. It involves the interests of the public, which far transcend the interests of the coal operators.

Mr. KELLOGG. Certain parties are merely going in now and making contracts before the passage of the bill for coal at unreasonable prices because they want to get possession of it and want to use it to speculate on. I know of one case where a concern bought a lot of coal and said, "We shall not sell it until next winter, when the public will have to pay for it." The Senator's amendment would permit them to enter into contracts at any price up to the time of the passage of the bill, whether they needed the coal or not and whether the industries needed it, and then the commission would not have the power to give priorities against those contracts to cars to move the necessary coal to the necessary industries. The amendment, as was intended, would take the very life out of the whole bill. It goes further than that. It provides:

> Nothing herein shall be construed as affecting the validity of existing contracts in effect prior to the date of the passage of this act.

It will be remembered that the bill reenacts certain powers of embargo and priority use of cars which now exist in the interstate commerce act. To-day the Interstate Commerce Commission can issue priorities of cars notwithstanding contracts, and ought to do so, and they could not protect the public if they did not do so. To say that private individuals could make contracts that would tie up the coal of the country and that the Interstate Commerce Commission could not have any power to grant priority of cars would be to turn the coal business of the country over to a lot of profiteers who made contracts prior to the passage of the bill. That is what would be done, and I am not in favor of it. If the coal operators insist upon anything of that kind, they are liable to get something worse.

The amendment provides further:

> Nor shall car service be denied to any person or corporation because of any prices named in any such preexisting contract.

As the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] said, they could make contracts for any price they please and get their cars for shipment of coal equally with those concerns needing the coal as a necessity. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Minnesota is unduly exercised about the amendment and has entirely misunderstood it. The amendment was not intended to interfere with the rights of the Interstate Commerce Commission to route cars according to the necessities of the case after they had been loaded. It does have the purpose, however, of preventing the withholding of cars from a shipper who had made a contract satisfactory to both sides of the contract prior to the passage of the act. The Senator from Iowa very distinctly stated that the bill did not purpose, or could not have for a purpose, any violation of existing contracts between individuals or corporations.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Minnesota has taken an entirely different view of the case. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think there is any difference in the position taken by the Senator from Minnesota and that taken by myself. If Mr. A enters into a contract with Mr. B for the sale and delivery of a certain amount of coal at a certain price, the bill does not affect the validity of that contract. If Mr. B does not deliver the coal he may be liable in damages. I do not say as to that, for I suppose that both parties, so far as they are concerned, would be estopped to deny that the price was a fair and reasonable one. That is the only sense in which I said the bill did not affect the validity of contracts which had been entered into between a seller and a buyer of coal.

But when we come to the latter part of the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia, which relates to the distribution of coal, to the fulfilling of the contract, to the securing of cars to fulfill the contract, it destroys the entire measure when it provided that, no matter what the price may be or the circumstances under which the contract was made, the Interstate Commerce Commission, when it surveys the public interests and determines where coal ought to go, to whom it should go in order to prevent hardship and suffering, must give the contracting parties the same privileges of transportation that are given to coal which is being sold at a fair price and which is going where it is most needed.

Then, as the Senator from Wisconsin said, and as the Senator from Minnesota said, the Senator's amendment not only impairs, if not entirely destroys, the efficiency of the bill, but it would repeal a very large part of the law which has been in force since 1920 and has been used on two different occasions for the relief of hardships similar to those through which we are now passing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But I do not believe that the law enacted during the war affecting the proper distribution of coal was used in the way the Senator now suggests. We passed laws, of course, regulating the price of coal at that time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not speaking of the war regulation in the production and sale of coal at all. I am speaking of the provisions of the act of 1920——

Mr. KELLOGG. The permanent railroad act.

Mr. CUMMINS. And which were invoked in the summer of 1920 to prevent a shortage of coal in certain communities, and which were invoked again in 1921 and which occasioned some embarrassment to some people. However, I think there is no observer of the situation which then existed who would question the wisdom of what was done by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It prevented by its act the stoppage of hundreds of essential industries and public utilities upon which the people depended, not only for light and heat but for every other purpose for which public utilities are operated. The Senator remembers what occurred in 1920 and in 1921, I am sure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I remember that, but I maintain that the amendment which I have proposed does not interfere at all with the priority orders issued under the Esch-Cummins Act of 1920, and it is not so intended to do.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it would do so, nevertheless.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is intended to accomplish this purpose: Where two persons have made an equitable contract for coal at a certain price, both parties being thoroughly agreeable to the contract, it is proposed that then the Interstate Commerce Commission or its agents shall not say to the shipper of that coal, "You shall not have cars in which to ship that particular coal at that price upon which you have agreed." The purpose of the amendment is not contrary to the public interests. There is going to be a great deal of coal mined from now on. It is going to be entirely a question of how the railroads can ship the coal. The potential mining capacity of the country to-day is about 16,000,000 tons a week, and it is not possible for the railroad companies to approach anything like distribution of that much coal.

Mr. CUMMINS. But that is coal. The mining capacity is great enough, but the carrying capacity is unfortunately at a low ebb.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Whom is the Senator about to attempt to protect? Is it the purchaser of coal who, prior to the passage of the bill, might have done a foolish thing and paid too much for it, or is he trying to protect somebody else who hereafter might possibly be prevented from buying coal at a reasonable price?

Mr. CUMMINS. There are two very general classes of people whom we are trying to protect. The first class is the class that must have coal in order to operate necessary industries. For instance, an electric light and power company that supplies the light and heat and power for a community of 150,000 people is out of coal. It has no contract. With the shortage of transportation, if an industry in the same town has a contract with some mine operator and is permitted to secure the fulfillment of its contract, the electric light and power company must shut down. The law as it is now, without any addition whatever, says to the Interstate Commerce Commission, "You may require the shipment of coal to the electric light and power plant instead of to the contractee of any quantity of coal." The Senator's amendment would not only take away the power which we are now trying to give to the commission but it would take away the power to order the equitable and the necessary distribution of coal.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator's amendment has two distinct parts. What is the Senator's purpose in the first part of his amendment and what does he think it would accomplish?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The first part of the amendment simply states that valid existing contracts between the purchaser and seller of coal "shall not be affected by this act." That means as to price. Of course, the purchaser of that coal takes his chances. If his enterprise is not one of the essential public necessities he would have to take his chances in regard to the delivery of the coal just as all other enterprises would. The amendment was not intended to reach or to prevent the fair distribution of coal according to the exigencies of the situation, realizing, of course, that the essential industries had a prior claim to a supply of coal.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose here is a contract made by an operator, we will say, with a speculator, whereby he agrees to deliver to the speculator within 10 days so many cars of coal. The Senator's theory is, is it not, that the first part of his amendment would compel that delivery irrespective of any other provision in the interstate commerce act?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the first place, I do not believe that it is within the power of the Congress to affect those contracts, but I think it ought to be clearly set out in the bill to prevent uneasiness and to prevent a lot of lawsuits and troubles which are likely to follow the passage of the bill. I do not believe, and I do not think there is a lawyer in the Chamber who believes, that the bill can abrogate private contracts between purchaser and seller.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree, but the Senator's contention is that here is a contract which requires the delivery of coal in cars at a certain point at a certain time. The language of the amendment, it seems to me, might abrogate entirely the provision of the present law with regard to priority.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to pour a little oil upon the troubled waters. Would it not answer the Senator's purpose to say that the provisions of the bill should not interfere with contracts entered into prior to the 1st of August? To all intents and purposes those contracts should be carried out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The amendment states:

SEC. 5. Nothing herein shall be construed as affecting valid existing contracts in effect prior to the date of the passage of this act, nor shall car service be denied to any person or corporation because of any prices named in any such preexisting contract.

We could make that "prior to September 1" in order that there would be no opportunity for any such contracts to be entered into subsequently, as has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. There was no intention on my part to protect any such contracts as that. My belief is that there are very few such contracts. About 75 per cent of the coal, I should say, in my State is distributed on contracts made with the railroad companies, public utility companies, and all sorts of concerns which need coal. They are obliged to see that their needs are supplied and their coal is contracted for in advance in order that they may insure for themselves an adequate supply of coal.

I do not know of any better way for concerns like those to which I have referred to express their need for coal when the season is on than to express it in figures, and that is the usual way. If one very greatly desires an article which is in the possession of somebody else, and there are two or three bidders for it, the one who desires it most will give more money for it. There have been no panic prices lately. Mr. Hoover and the coal operators, by voluntary action on their part, agreed upon a price for coal of $3.50 per ton. As I recall, that was in June. That agreement was lived up to by at least 70 or 75 per cent of the coal operators. Voluntarily, my understanding is, at a subsequent date that price was raised to the extent of $1 a ton. That was done in order to stimulate production. If the price of coal be kept down too low, there is going to be a shortage of production. If the price goes up, more mines will be operated and consequently more coal will be produced.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator from West Virginia said that we had too much coal already produced for the equipment that we have. Is not that the complaint?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is very true, Mr. President.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the purpose of this proposition is not to stimulate the production of coal but to regulate its distribution, is it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A large number of mines—I will not say most of them—have been shut down for a year or two; a very large number of them have been closed down entirely, while others have been working only sporadically. The high-cost mines have not been able to operate until recently; during the last spring, when the price of coal was low, a large number of such mines were automatically put out of commission; they could not produce coal at such a price as would permit them to enter the market. Now about 75 or, at any rate, 70 per cent of all the coal operators have voluntarily conformed to the ideas of Mr. Hoover with reference to the price of coal.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, the Senator from West Virginia now wishes to protect the other 30 per cent who have not done so? That can be the only purpose of the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The 30 per cent, Mr. President, or, indeed, a smaller number than that, habitually, at one time or another, keep their coal on the market as spot coal. They themselves speculate, instead of having a sure run of coal for the entire year, as most of them do, at a certain price. If they think coal is going up, they act like other business men in similar situations. A man who owns a bushel of wheat in the State of the Senator from Wisconsin or in Minnesota, if he thinks the price of wheat is going up, will put his wheat into an elevator and will hold it. The coal operators in my State are actuated by the same business principles as are the wheat growers of the West. I am just as willing to protect the wheat growers in the West as I am to protect the coal operators in my State.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, the Senator from West Virginia thinks it perfectly right, does he, to permit an increase of 300 per cent over the fair price fixed by the Hoover committee?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have paid an increase of 300 per cent on a great many commodities when they became scarce and nothing is said about it. We are obliged to pay it.

Mr. LENROOT. But what the Senator from West Virginia is trying to do is to permit that kind of contracts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not trying to protect that kind at all; but I say that where a voluntary contract has been entered into between two men, then it does not seem to me that it is up to the Government to protect one man as against the other.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session this afternoon it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to continue this afternoon. In an emergency, I would be perfectly willing that the Senate should take a recess by unanimous consent, but I do not see any such emergency as would require this bill to be considered between 12 o'clock and 2 o'clock to-morrow, thereby preventing the Senate having its usual morning hour. In all probability half an hour in the morning will dispose of the morning business. I have not any desire to resist the Senator's bill, and I have not done so, but I do not see any reason for taking a recess until to-morrow morning while a bill of this kind is being considered.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Alabama is very considerate, but I think there is a very great emergency existing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am willing to stay here this evening.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator objects, of course, I shall withdraw the suggestion, or if the Senator really desires a morning hour to-morrow morning——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think we should have a morning hour to-morrow morning, unless there is some good reason for not doing so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa for unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session to-day it be to recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock?

Mr. CURTIS. May I suggest as a compromise that when the Senate closes its session to-day it adjourn, instead of taking a recess, until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning? That will give us a little extra time, which we may, by unanimous consent, devote to the calendar, if that is desired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to run on here this evening if there is any emergency existing; I am in favor of disposing of the bill to-night; but I do not see any reason to dispense with the usual morning business because a bill of this character is under consideration. For four months Senators on this side of the Chamber raised no objection to recessing from day to day during the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if there is any reason other than as a matter of courtesy, perhaps, why we should not dispose of the pending bill this evening?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no reason that I know of, save that I am sure the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has not yet concluded his observations upon the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am willing to stay here until 11 o'clock to-night, if that be necessary.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then I suggest that the Senator from West Virginia proceed and finish his remarks.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know why we should adopt any unusual methods to force this bill through. It has been the custom of the Senate, where a Senator has preferred that the consideration of the bill should go over for another day, to follow that course unless there was some really urgent reason why the Senate should continue its session. Does the Senator think he could finish his remarks this evening?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator that there is hardly a possibility that we might finish this evening and I prefer to go on in the morning. I understand there are one or two other Senators who wish to speak in the morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia whether he has any objection to a vote on the bill to-night, and whether or not he can conclude this evening?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hardly think that a vote may be had on the bill to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session to-day it recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I have suggested as a compromise, to which I hope there will be no objection, that when the Senate concludes its business to-day we adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. I accept that suggestion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is suggested that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection to such unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I want to urge Senators to accept the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. If they think there would be any improper contracts entered into before the passage of the bill then I strongly urge that they accept the amendment so as to provide that all contracts entered into by the 1st of September shall be carried out.

This, I fear, is a much more serious proposition than we realize. I wish to call the attention of Senators to the fact that manufacturing plants sell their products many months ahead. They buy their supplies of raw material and ascertain the approximate cost of their production and then sell their output, sometimes as far ahead as six months or perhaps longer. If by legislative enactment we attempt to abrogate their contracts for fuel supplies we are going to disorganize all business in this country. The proposal is very far-reaching and would be very injurious to industry and would also disconcert labor. In the case of manufacturing institutions which use coal, as practically all of them do, the contract price for the coal has been fixed, and it is not right; it is not fair; it is not honest; it is not just for the Government now to say that those contracts shall not be carried out at the price agreed upon.

The contracts I want carried out are those contracts made at reasonable prices, in fact, at exceedingly reasonable prices; much more reasonable than could be obtained if there were any change. So I hope Senators will seriously consider the effect of the bill on existing contracts, and then as to the surplus coal above that contracted for any price which may be agreed upon may be fixed or the price may be regulated in any way which may seem proper; but it is not right to abrogate vested rights.

I do not want the coal operators to profiteer on anybody, but the contracts I want carried out particularly are those made by my constituents in South Carolina at $1.90 a ton for coal at the mines. Those contracts, made in the South, provide a lower price than can be obtained hereafter. It is not fair for the Government to set aside such contracts or to interfere with their fulfillment.

What I am trying to do is in the interest of fair play, in the interest of trade, in the interest of industry, in the interest of seeing that the business of a large section of the country shall be continued.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. If a man has a contract for coal at $1.90 a ton, does the Senator want the cars to fill that contract irrespective of the needs of the remainder of the country?

Mr. DIAL. No; but I think that coal should be supplied under that contract to keep the enterprise going, and then let the other portions of the country also have the coal they need. I believe there is plenty to go around.

Mr. LENROOT. The trouble is there is not plenty to go around.

Mr. DIAL. All we need is just a little business sense in this matter, and not to get excited about it. I think there is plenty for everybody, and it is merely a question of getting it out. However, it is not right, it is not fair, to interfere with the contracts which the people whom I have in mind have made. They sell their products many months ahead, and now for the Government to disrupt their contracts without any fault upon their part, I believe, is not justified. It will result in abrogating their scale of wages; it will throw their business into confusion and involve loss to them.

We pass bills here in Congress to pay people for claims which are much less honest than claims would be on the part of those who now hold such contracts if they were permitted to be broken. We have passed claims involving unearned profits on contracts canceled after the war. Some time ago the Senate passed a bill involving several million dollars, introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], to pay some claims growing out of sugar contracts made in South America, the contracts not having been carried out. I say that for Congress in time of peace, when there is opportunity for sober thought, knowingly to abrogate contracts and destroy their effect is not just.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I yield; but all I want is simply to endeavor to see if I can not cover the situation to which I have referred.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not understand that there is anything in this bill that affects any contract for coal at $1.90 a ton, does he?

Mr. DIAL. Absolutely and directly, it does. That is what is done to-day. They will not furnish them cars now.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but that is under existing law.

Mr. DIAL. This does not help it. This makes it worse. It gives them more power.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa is willing, I should like to have a short executive session now.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 6, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 5, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, O Lord, for the encircling ministries of Thy Providence. Help all to understand that through repentance and love we have access to the Father, who pardons and restores all who are of a humble heart. O Thou God of the eternities, look upon our Nation. Destroy the dissensions, the jealousies, and the enmities of class. Strike to silence the discordant notes of defiance to law and authority. Bring into unity all our fellow citizens until righteous freedom from every form of oppression and repression is achieved. May we remember our heritage and gird ourselves to follow the teachings of Thy truth. Whatever betides these critical days, the Lord helping us, we shall not fail. In Thy holy name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, September 1, was read and approved.

CHIEF CLERK.

The Speaker laid before the House the following communication:

SEPTEMBER 2, 1922.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Desiring to be temporarily absent from my office, I hereby designate Mr. John H. Hollingsworth, Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, to sign any and all papers for me which he would be authorized to sign by virtue of this designation and of clause 4, Rule III, of the House.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM TYLER PAGE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 62. An act for the relief of Charles K. Bond, alias Kimball W. Rollins;

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in House of Representatives amendment to the joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 23) authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles quarry within the limits of a United States military reservation to the Philippine Islands and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto provided military necessities permit.

The message also announced that the Presiding Officer had laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. LENROOT, Mr. STANFIELD, and Mr. WALSH of Montana as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1948. An act for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter; and

H. R. 12493. An act amending the act of June 30, 1922, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 10193. An act extending time for allotments on the Crow Reservation; protecting certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes; relief of Indians occupying certain lands in Arizona, New Mexico, and California; issuing patents in certain cases; establishing a revolving fund on the Rosebud Reservation; memorial to Indians of the Rosebud Reservation killed in the World War; conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior as to alienation in certain Indian allotments, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1274. An act for the relief of Maude H. Mosher; and

H. R. 11901. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River to connect the city of Benwood, W. Va., and the city of Bellaire, Ohio.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who is chairman of the Committee on Rules, inform us what the House will probably consider on reconvening on Friday?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Late word from the conferees on the tariff bill indicate an early agreement on the tariff bill, and there is some probability that the report will be made Friday or the very last part of the week.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I ask what will follow?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is hoped that the bonus bill and the coal legislation will also come in about the same time, or immediately following.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Those are merely conference reports that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The coal legislation would not be in the nature of a conference report.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is it contemplated that the House will not transact any original business during the present session?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not advised at this moment of matters that are to be taken up before the report of the conferees on the tariff bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I say to the gentleman from Kansas and the House that there are several subjects of very great public interest which could with propriety be discussed in the House, and that it looks to me that some time ought to be provided in which Members of the House could discuss those matters. Does not the gentleman think so, and would he not be willing to have a session of the House for that purpose?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There are matters of very great concern to the country that might well be discussed, and I think probably between the consideration of the report of the conferees on the tariff bill and the taking up of the report of the conference committee on the bonus bill opportunity may be had for such discussion. It is expected that within a very short time, probably to-day or to-morrow, as soon as it is definitely ascertained when the conferees will reach an agreement on the tariff bill, notice will be sent out to the Members to be in attendance; that will probably be on Friday or Saturday, and in any event not later than Monday.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman means that Members will then be here; but when will time be afforded for discussion?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As I say, there will be time between the consideration of these conference reports when there might well be opportunity for discussion.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That seems to me very vague. Might I ask why it would not be proper to have the discussion to-day or to-morrow? Members of the House, many of them, are here in attendance on their duties; why should they remain here with nothing to do?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There are no concrete propositions now before the House.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I say that the matter of accepting Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals is a concrete proposition now before the House. It has been stated on that side that it will not be allowed to come before the House, but surely the gentleman will appreciate the fairness of allowing those who favor the proposition an opportunity to discuss it and express their views.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That matter is not before the House.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. We have the bill on the calendar.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not before the House for consideration.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It can not come before the House without the consent of the gentleman from Kansas, as chairman of the Committee on Rules, and his committee. Why are we forbidden to say anything about it? Are we to be gagged and not permitted to call the attention of the country to the position which the gentleman and his committee and the Republican steering committee have taken? Is it possible that at this session of Congress, with that matter ripe and ready, those who control that side will not allow the subject of Ford's offer to come before the House, although we have nothing else to do?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There are many matters quite as important as leasing Muscle Shoals to Henry Ford.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Evidently the gentleman thinks they are more important, but why not take them up?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The shipping bill is quite as important. Is the gentleman in favor of taking that up?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I certainly am. I would like to see how many Members on that side can be induced to vote for it. I would like to have it demonstrated that the ship subsidy bill can not get the support on that side that you think—only the support of a few leaders. I would be glad to have the gentleman in the exercise of his power to bring it before the House. I challenge him to do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, the gentleman from Alabama is not on the stage.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am in the House of Representatives, which is the greatest stage in the country. The people of the country are looking at the farce being played upon that stage——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. From the galleries.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The country is looking at this stage and expecting Congress to do something. The affairs of the Nation are at a crisis, yet the gentleman from Kansas and the leaders of the majority of the House are doing nothing and seem incapable of intelligent action.

He will let us do nothing. Will he persist in doing so?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 6, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

678. Communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of State setting forth the desirability of terminating the present treaty arrangement with Panama and the negotiation of a new treaty with that Government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

679. Communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation authorizing the expenditure of not exceeding $30,000 of the appropriation for collecting statistics, Bureau of Census, for the fiscal year 1923, for binding schedules (H. Doc. No. 380); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 12555) to amend and modify the war risk insurance act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: A bill (H. R. 12556) to amend the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stats.); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. REED of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 12557) to provide for a public building at Clarksburg, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MALONEY: A bill (H. R. 12558) to make the 12th day of February a holiday in the District of Columbia, the Territory of Hawaii, and the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 12559) to further define malfeasance in office, providing punishment therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MONTOYA: A bill (H. R. 12560) granting a pension to Nicolasita B. Speakman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PATTERSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 12561) granting a pension to Julia A. H. Colby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBSION: A bill (H. R. 12562) granting an increase of pension to Ulysses S. Lewis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 12563) granting a pension to Pet Floyd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6267. My Mr. FULLER: Resolutions of Brooklyn Post, No. 368, Department of Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring enactment of the Bursum general pension bill to increase Civil War pensions; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

6268. Also, petition of Missouri banks and trust companies, opposed to branch banking, favoring the Capper-Dyer bills (S. 3941 and H. R. 12414); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

6269. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Mr. and Mrs. J. Kemmet, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring an import duty of 40 per cent on wire cloth; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6270. Also, petition of National Shoe Retailers' Association of the United States of America (Inc.), Chicago, Ill., opposing tariff on hides; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6271. By Mr. LINEBERGER: Memorial of officials of Bullock's, of Los Angeles, protesting against passage of bill prohibiting importing trade-marked goods; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6272. By Mr. ROSENBLOOM: Petition of Fairmont Railway Shop Trades Federation, S. D. Summers, president, Fairmont, W. Va., regarding the strike situation; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, September 6, 1922.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D. of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, the eyes of all wait upon Thee. Again we thank Thee that Thou hast crowned our lives with loving kindness and tender mercy. Continue this day Thy favors, blessing us and our dear ones here and at a distance, and be near to any with Thy comfort and strength who are oppressed in body, in mind, or in estate. Bless our land. We glorify Thee that Thou art, out of the tumult, apparently bringing quickly peace and confidence. Continue Thy favor. Grant an abundant harvest, grant work to willing hands, and in all our borders bring peace and prosperity.

And especially to Thy servants in the United States Senate come in Thy loving providence and grace, endowing them in this hour with that wisdom which is from above. Keep them in harmony, in faithfulness, in loyalty to Thee and to their fellowmen, and help them so to legislate and enact that, without the thought of personal selfishness or personal ambition, there may be through them ministry of peace, of truth, of justice, and of brotherhood, for a blessing to the land and to the glory of Thy name in Jesus Christ. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate on the subject of the temporary injunction in the railway strike.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor and will proceed.

THE TEMPORARY INJUNCTION IN THE RAILWAY STRIKE.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I realize that under the conditions confronting the Senate, difficulty may be encountered in procuring the attendance of a quorum of Senators. For that reason I have procured consent to address the Senate on a subject intimately related to the acts of the Congress as construed and applied by the courts of the United States in injunction cases, and particularly in a proceeding recently instituted and now pending in the Federal court at Chicago.

Mr. President, responding to public impatience at the conditions arising from the railway shopmen's strike, Attorney General Daugherty on the 30th of August filed in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, a bill of complaint joining as defendants the railway employees' department of the American Federation of Labor, the Interational Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers, the International Alliance of Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers, the International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, International Association of Machinists, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and the superior officers of these respective organizations, together with numerous other system federations and unknown and unnamed labor organizations and their officers. The judge immediately issued an order probably more comprehensive in practical effect than any injunction ever before issued by any court.

According to the Washington Post, of September 4, and other newspapers, 1,000 writs were immediately issued and a force of 5,500 deputy United States marshals mobilized to serve and enforce the same. Announcement is made that the Federal Army is held in readiness to enforce the court's order in all its details in the event the army of marshals and deputy marshals prove inadequate for that purpose.

Persons not parties to the proceedings are required to take notice of them under penalty of processes of contempt in case the prohibitions of the injunction are disregarded by them.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S JUSTIFICATION FOR THE EXTRAORDINARY PROCEEDING.

The Attorney General in a statement made to the court in presenting the petition for temporary injunction, which statement is published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 1, seeks to justify the very extraordinary procedure on the ground that a nation-wide conspiracy exists among the shopmen and their sympathizers to prevent by force or intimidation the operation of the railroads, to destroy railroad property, and to imperil the lives of persons engaged in the operation of the railroads and particularly those employed in the places of the striking shopmen.

That crime shall be prevented when it is legally possible to do so and that it shall be punished when proven is axiomatic, and will not be controverted by any citizen who is a believer in law and who is opposed to anarchy.

It follows that a worker has no more right, merely because he is on strike, to commit assault or to destroy property or to threaten to do so than any other citizen. If a laborer on strike is charged with crime, his guilt or innocence should be tested and determined in the same way as the guilt or innocence of other citizens must be tried. No man can claim immunity from punishment for crime because of membership in a labor union or of sympathy with laborers who are on strike.

On the other hand, no citizen may be presumed guilty of assaulting another person or of seeking to destroy or endanger property merely because of affiliation with a labor organization whose members may be engaged in a strike.

These principles when stated in the abstract are not controverted. They are fundamental.

In their practical application, however, difficulty is found when industrial disputes attended by strikes disturb the normal course of industry and commerce.

Intolerance, frequently widespread, particularly among those who experience discomfort and inconvenience, follows, with the result that prejudice often prompts hasty conclusions and confuses the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused with just indignation at the commission of the crime.

CONDITION OF LOCOMOTIVES AND CARS.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has reported that one-half of the railway locomotives and cars available are in bad order. Press reports are to the effect that the Attorney General claims one-half the cars and locomotives have been injured, the implication being that the strikers or their sympathizers are responsible. It is said in news reports that the Attorney General has accumulated evidence in numerous cases to show conspiracy and attempts to ruin property and jeopardize life but that it will not be alleged that the strikers are guilty in the majority of these cases, but that the conduct of strikers or their leaders indirectly caused the violations.

In any case where the evidence shows a striker has injured property, in any case where it is established that strike leaders or sympathizers have incited such injuries, arrests, trials, and convictions should be procured under due process of law.

Students, however, understand that lawless elements in no wise connected with the strikers, frequently while strikes are in progress avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by strike conditions to commit crimes and to cast suspicion of guilt upon the strikers. In a sense it is undeniable that strike conditions are promotive of disorder and afford opportunities for violence.

Nevertheless strikes are not unlawful under any statute of the United States and no justification exists for attributing to strikers acts which may be committed by persons or organizations interested in creating public sentiment against the strikers or by lawless persons not connected with labor unions or under their influence or control.

FEW CASES OF VIOLENCE FAIRLY ATTRIBUTABLE TO STRIKERS.

Fully indorsing the prevention and punishment of crime by whomsoever committed and from whatever motive, careful study of the evidence now available for public consideration prompts the conclusion that few cases of violence attributable to strikers have occurred. None incited by strike leaders have been published. Undoubtedly personal encounters between strikers and strike breakers have taken place, but press reports do not indicate that those in sympathy with the laborers have had more to do in causing violence in such cases than their opponents. With thousands of men employed and armed to discharge the functions of strike breakers, with thousands of armed guards, many of whom are desperate characters and noted gunmen, it is not surprising that conflicts, for which the laborers and their leaders are not fairly blamable, should have occurred and that some of these conflicts have resulted in homicide.

Candidly, from the standpoint of one out of sympathy with strikes as an enlightened process for securing settlement of industrial controversies, the evidence available for my study establishes the conclusion that the leaders in the shopmen's strike have without exception emphatically and in good faith advocated and counseled against all forms of violence in the prosecution of the strike. They have proclaimed the justice of the shopmen's cause, urged them to stand together, and have encouraged them against yielding, but there is no evidence, and no evidence has been published, to show the use of language which expressly or impliedly incites to violence.

Of course, it is understandable that wise leadership would not discredit its cause by open promotion of lawlessness and crime. Nevertheless, it must not be assumed that because violence has occurred the leaders in the labor organizations interested have prompted it. To do this would be violative of every rule of evidence and fairness.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S DUTY RESPECTING BAD-ORDER CARS.

It may be that instances have occurred where strikers or their sympathizers have deliberately contributed to the impairment of railway equipment, and in all such cases penalties should be imposed with promptness and with firmness. The correct procedure, however, is by indictment and prosecution so that the accused may have a trial and be confronted with the witnesses against him.

On the other hand, the diminution in the railway repair forces, caused by the shopmen's strike, and the employment of less-skilled workers in their places, as everyone knows, has caused bad-order condition in many cars and locomotives, and in spite of the constantly increasing number of repairmen being employed by the railroads bad-order cars and locomotives are accumulating by reason of natural causes. This condition will continue throughout the early future, because the railroads can not secure repair workers sufficient in numbers and efficiency completely to perform normal repair services.

Every bad-order locomotive and car operated in the passenger business menaces the safety of passengers and of the operatives. Every locomotive and freight car operated in bad condition in the carriage of freight endangers property and the lives of the freight-train operatives.

To safeguard life and property the Congress enacted the safety appliance laws and the locomotive and boiler inspection acts. Everyone knows that the railroads are daily using cars and locomotives in bad order in disregard of these laws. Everyone knows that lives are being lost and property is being destroyed because of the condition of the railway equipment. The Attorney General has made no effort, so far as public information goes, to enforce these laws, but their violation has been acquiesced in through sympathy with the effort to break the shopmen's strike.

Why has no effort been made to enforce safety appliance and inspection laws? The answer, of course, is that their rigid enforcement would make more effective the shopmen's strike and increase the difficulties encountered by the railroads in breaking and defeating the strike.

No other explanation exists for the failure to enforce these laws.

THE INJUNCTION EXCEEDS THE LAWFUL POWER OF THE COURT.

Thoroughly in sympathy with the protection of life and property, cordially supporting the enforcement of law and the punishment of crime, I protest the temporary injunction issued in the shopmen's strike as exceeding the powers of the court, as violative of express law, and of the constitutional guaranties of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and the right peaceably to assemble.

THE TEMPORARY INJUNCTION VIOLATES THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

In a manifest effort to end the strike by injunction, following, as it is alleged, precedents heretofore established in certain industrial strikes, the Attorney General has prompted the district court at Chicago to issue an order which is not only plainly in violation of the Clayton Act but which likewise transgresses the Constitution of the United States in the following particulars:

1. By abridging freedom of speech.
2. Freedom of the press.
3. The right of the people peaceably to assemble.

The Chicago Federal district court issuing the injunction has only such powers as are conferred upon it by law. The Congress has not attempted to authorize the Federal courts to abridge the privileges mentioned, and certainly could not do so if it tried.

The alleged advantages to the public to be derived from this legal process, issued in excess of the judicial power, are more than offset by the permanent impairment of the reputation of the Federal judiciary for integrity and impartiality which must result from such an unwarranted assumption of authority. No court order violative of constitutional rights may be countenanced, even if it finds sympathy among influential bodies of our citizenship, or, for that matter, in widespread public opinion. From the beginning of the Government wise statesmen have feared that the Federal judiciary may become the instrument for nullifying the Constitution which it was created to uphold. This fear was epitomized by Jefferson when he said:

> The great object of my fear is the Federal judiciary. That body, like gravity, ever acting, with noiseless foot and unalarming advance, gaining ground step by step, and holding what it gains, is engulfing insidiously the special governments into the jaws of that which feeds them.
> There is no danger I apprehend so much as the consolidation of our Government by the noiseless and therefore unalarming instrumentality of the Supreme Court. This is the form in which federalism now arrays itself, and consolidation is the present principle of distinction between Republicans and pseudo Republicans but real federalists.
> Where the press is free and every man able to read all is safe.

The courts themselves in recorded opinions, and judges in formal dissents, have repeatedly and frequently denounced the alleged tendency of the Federal judiciary to extend its power by implication and by construction so as to minimize the constitutional influence of the legislative department and break down the sacred guaranties of the Constitution. Many of the ablest lawyers, whose labors have glorified the history of the American bar, have taken occasion in public addresses, in briefs, and in arguments before courts to protest what they have termed the encroachment of the judiciary upon the powers of other departments. These fears and these criticisms find justification in the consciences of enlightened citizens, who realize that the surest way to discredit American justice and the courts established to administer it is by usurpation of power on the part of the courts and the inevitable undermining in the public conscience of that confidence and respect in the judiciary which are indispensable to the maintenance of law and order. The perpetuity of the American judicial system depends upon the fidelity with which Federal judges observe the limitations imposed by the Constitution for the exercise of their powers, and not by the readiness with which they disregard those limitations in conformity to alleged public opinion.

Corruption and decay, ruin and anarchy, inevitably must follow the prostitution of the Federal judiciary to proceedings violative of the fundamental safeguards of liberty and conformable to the varying moods of public opinion.

This principle is general and of far greater importance than the conservation of public convenience or comfort. It must be rigidly applied. No exception can be justified by arbitrary court orders, even though acquiesced in by the public in the anxiety of citizens to secure industrial peace. The Federal courts on the pretense of public convenience or necessity can not exercise power denied them by the Constitution to the impairment of rights or the abridgement of privileges which the Congress itself is forbidden to ignore, abridge, or impair.

The question of fact and of legal interpretation as to whether the injunction issued by the Chicago court in the shopmen's strike is open to the objections mentioned, or to any of them, involves consequences which transcend in importance present industrial disputes, and which are associated with the future happiness and liberty of our people.

Acts of violence to persons and property, the employment of language in the nature of threats, or the use of words printed or spoken calculated to intimidate persons lawfully employed or seeking employment, are easily distinguishable from statements, publications, and acts which in fact and in law are ordinarily permissible in the prosecution of strikes.

In this order, however, the court employs language which practically construed constitutes a denial to the shopmen of the right to continue the strike. It expressly forbids their leaders and attorneys from advising them as to the ordinary proceedings incident to the conduct and essential to the prosecution of the strike. It forbids argument and declares requests and entreaties unlawful. Under penalty of punishment for contempt it denies to striking shopmen the privilege of requesting others to quit or refrain from accepting railway employment; the leaders from encouraging members of the union to abandon employment or to refrain from entering the service of the railways; it restrains instructions, requests, and statements by word of mouth, by telephone, by interview, published in newspapers or otherwise, with reference to the conduct of strikers or members of the Federated Shop Crafts, and denies to anyone the right to do or say anything for the purpose of inducing another to abandon railway employment or to refrain from entering such employment.

In conformity, perhaps, to precedents discredited in the sober judgment of lawyers and judges generally, it restrains the use of labor-employment funds in behalf of strikers for purposes that are lawful as well as for unlawful purposes. It enjoins meetings, addresses, and communications designed to encourage a continuance of the strike. It outlaws peaceful picketing and interviews in newspapers, and, in substance, declares any act in aid of the strikers or in promotion of their cause, such acts as are usually pursued in the prosecution of peaceful strikes, to be unlawful.

To sustain the foregoing provisions of the injunction with any semblance of authority it is necessary to hold that the shopmen's strike constitutes an unlawful conspiracy, and that any words spoken or written and any acts performed, however peaceful in their nature or lawful in themselves, constitute efforts in pursuance of such unlawful conspiracy. Surely no lawyer who is familiar with the history of this controversy will make such a contention. No citizen, however anxious he may be to end the strike and to prevent future strikes, will assert such a proposition.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES HAVE LEGAL RIGHT TO STRIKE.

Whatever may be your opinion as to how the law should be written, the law is that railway employees have the legal right to strike for the enforcement of a demand, either for an increase or against a reduction in wages, notwithstanding a decision against their contentions by the Labor Board.

No one will contend that express provisions of law forbid members of labor organizations concertedly to abandon employment either for the purpose of preventing a reduction in wages or for securing an increase in compensation or for preventing or for securing a change in working conditions. That the legal right on behalf of railway employees to strike for these purposes exists, unless prevented by law, no one will deny. The right has often been asserted. It has occasionally been exercised, and prior to the transportation act has not been seriously questioned in any legal proceedings. Differences of opinion concerning the wisdom of a policy which permits strikes on the part of railway employees have occasioned inquiries and investigations by committees of Congress in an effort to devise some plan which will prevent their occurrence, but the Congress has never outlawed strikes among transportation employees.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, of course what the Senator has just said is true; but the right to strike has not been denied. He and I voted for an antistrike provision in the transportation act as it originally passed the Senate, but it was stricken out by the House. I do not understand, however, that any injunction was sought or that any injunction has been granted on the subject of the right to strike.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Indiana understands that what he and I or others may have attempted unsuccessfully to write into the law is not the law, and that if Congress rejected the position taken by the Senator from Indiana and other Senators the action of Congress in doing so is binding not only on Senators and Representatives but it is binding on judges.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I propose to show if the Senator will permit me to proceed——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I propose to show that the principle underlying this injunction is that it is unlawful to strike. Otherwise, the Attorney General never would have dared ask the court to say to American freemen that they could not hold public meetings; otherwise, the Attorney General never would have dared to ask the court to say to American citizens that they could not publish interviews in a newspaper relating to the issues involved in the strike; that they could not appeal by argument or entreaty to workers to refrain from accepting railway employment or to abandon railway employment. On no other theory could the Federal court in Chicago have proceeded than that the complaint set up an allegation that the strike was an unlawful conspiracy to restrain commerce. I propose to establish that conclusion.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I shall be very much interested in the argument to be pursued by the Senator from Arkansas along that line. I did not understand that there was anything said or anything inferred about the legality of the strike or the right to strike. The injunction was issued against what is called a conspiracy to interfere with interstate commerce and stop the mails.

Mr. ROBINSON. It so happens, Mr. President, that the Senator from Indiana interrupted me just at the moment where I was entering upon a discussion of the very subject-matter of his inquiry and interruption.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator owes no apology to me. I welcome interruptions from the Senator from Indiana. They are always illuminating, if his conclusions are frequently erroneous.

Analysis of the complaint upon which the injunction in the shopmen's strike was issued reveals the implication that the Attorney General takes the position that the decision of the Labor Board reducing the wages of the shopmen renders a strike in protest unlawful. The complaint recites the history of the controversy which caused the shopmen's strike. It recites the decision of the Labor Board. It recites the violation of that decision by the shopmen, and, by implication, charges that the strike is unlawful, and follows that charge with injunctions and prohibitions against acts on the part of individuals and on the part of organizations which could be restrained only on the theory that they, while lawful in themselves, were in pursuance of a common conspiracy. The complaint discloses very careful study on the part of those who framed it. The only theory on which the courts have ever sought to restrain men from holding public meetings, either as individuals or as organizations, is that the meetings to be held and the things to be done and said, while not unlawful in themselves, were, in fact and in law, in pursuance of a conspiracy.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question right at this point?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not. Of course, it will interrupt me, but it will not disturb me.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do not want to disturb the Senator or interrupt the thread of his argument. I should like just to get the Senator's viewpoint.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does the Senator hold that the Government was wrong in seeking an injunction at all for any purpose?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will just be good enough to let me make my statement, I shall discuss wherein I think the Attorney General caused the Chicago court to exceed its powers, and wherein I think every lawyer who studies the question, I care not what his politics or his sympathies in this controversy, will concede that literally construed and rigidly enforced the injunction is a violation of law and a defiance of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The length to which the injunction goes, or the fact that any injunction whatever was granted?

Mr. ROBINSON. The length to which the injunction goes, of course.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator has made it clear that his complaint is that the court exceeded its authority.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why, certainly; and that it exceeded its authority in ways and to a degree that among lawyers there can be no question about.

I have just declared that clearly, considering the character of the injunction sought and issued, one of the theories underlying the complaint is that the shopmen's strike is unlawful; that it constitutes, in fact and in law, a conspiracy unduly to restrain commerce, and that acts done in pursuance of that conspiracy, even though lawful in themselves, are sought to be restrained. I now recur to that proposition. The shopmen's strike is not unlawful. Strikes against decisions of the Labor Board are not violations of law. The shopmen had the legal right to strike, notwithstanding the Labor Board's decision. This right must not be confused with questions involving the wisdom underlying the strike or the merits of the shopmen's contention. The transportation act does not outlaw strikes against decisions by the Labor Board. The Congress after full discussion refused to go that far. Congress deliberately chose to rely solely upon the moral force which public opinion habitually gives to the decisions of impartial tribunals in order to secure acceptance on the part of the railways and the employees of decisions by the Labor Board. No other conclusion can be justified from the history of title 3 of the transportation act relating to disputes between carriers and their employees. No other position is tenable from the language of the act.

After prolonged discussion and deliberate consideration, Congress rejected the provision defining and penalizing as conspiracies to interfere with commerce refusals of railway executives and of railway employees to abide by decisions of the Labor Board, and adopted in its stead the following:

> All decisions of the Labor Board shall be entered upon the records of the board, and copies thereof, together with such statement of facts bearing thereon as the board may deem proper, shall be immediately communicated to the parties to the dispute, the President, each adjustment board, and the commission, and shall be given further publicity in such manner as the Labor Board may determine.

Section 313 of the transportation act, the only other provision of law relating to the binding effect of decisions by the Labor Board, is as follows:

> The Labor Board, in case it has reason to believe that any decision of the Labor Board or of an adjustment board is violated by any carrier, or employee, or subordinate official, or organization thereof, may upon its own motion, after due notice and hearing to all persons directly interested in such violation, determine whether in its opinion such violation has occurred and make public its decision in such manner as it may determine.

Thus Congress deliberately left both the railways and their employees at liberty to observe or disregard decisions of the Labor Board, subject only to the influence of public opinion.

This is the construction uniformly placed upon the transportation act by both the representatives of the executives and the railway employees. The railroads, as stated by the President in his address to Congress August 18, 1922, were first to ignore or to refuse to obey decisions of the Labor Board.

> When these failures of many of the carriers to abide by decisions of the board were brought to my attention, I could more fairly appraise the feelings of the strikers though they had a remedy without seeking to paralyze interstate commerce.

He must have meant by this declaration that since the carriers in numerous instances had elected to disregard the decisions of the board, where its decisions were beneficial to the employees, it is not surprising that the latter should follow the example so often set by the carriers and refuse to obey decisions adverse to their interest, decisions helpful to labor, being neither observed nor enforced in their behalf, although the President thought the shopmen might have found a milder remedy than resort to a strike. Surely if the carriers are not bound by decisions which protect the rights and interests of the laborers, it is unreasonable to insist that the workers have no practical course save submission to orders which they regard as oppressive and subversive. If the orders in their favor may be disregarded and the executives be not required to conform to those orders, how, then, can a fair-minded person say that the laborers are bound to regard decisions adverse to them? The truth is that neither the railway executives and managers nor the representatives of the railway employees wanted the Labor Board created. Both preferred that they be left free from the danger of incurring penalties because of violations. The railroads have challenged and still challenge the authority of the Labor Board, and the workers very naturally regard it unfair that the board's decisions shall be enforced only when against their interests or contentions.

Not only is the right to strike not denied by law to railway employees, but it is expressly preserved and secured by the provisions of the act known as the Clayton Act.

INJUNCTION VIOLATES CLAYTON ACT.

The injunction issued in the shopmen's case is a plain violation of sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act.

The history of this law is that it was enacted to relieve labor unions and agricultural and horticultural organizations from the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act, and from the danger of prosecutions under certain decisions of the Federal courts. It was intended to dignify human labor and to recognize that something more than mere mercenary considerations must be taken into account in repressing the organized efforts of laborers to advance their welfare and to secure more wholesome living and working conditions. These considerations are not less important now than when the Clayton Act was passed. When humanely contemplated they have lost no power of appeal which ever moved the hearts and judgments of men and women, who regard the health, the comfort, and the happiness of the millions who toil, and of all who are dependent upon their labors, as more sacred than the interests of profit makers.

The sections of the Clayton Act applicable are as follows:

SEC. 6. That the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce. Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 20. That no restraining order or injunction shall be granted by any court of the United States, or a judge or the judges thereof, in any case between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, unless necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property, or to a property right, of the party making the application, for which injury there is no adequate remedy at law, and such property or property right must be described with particularity in the application, which must be in writing and sworn to by the applicant or by his agent or attorney.

And no such restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any person or persons, whether singly or in concert, from terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from attending at any place where any such person or persons may lawfully be, for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or from peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from working; or from ceasing to patronize or to employ any party to such dispute, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful and lawful means so to do; or from paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person engaged in such dispute any strike benefits or other moneys or things of value; or from peaceably assembling in a lawful manner, and for lawful purposes; or from doing any act or thing which might lawfully be done in the absence of such dispute by any party thereto; nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held to be violations of any law of the United States.

Section 6 expressly asserts that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce, and implies that laborers may organize and act in concert for the purpose of mutual help without incurring the risk of prosecution under antitrust laws. Admittedly this paragraph is ambiguous and lacking in definite expression.

Section 20 contains two paragraphs free from ambiguity and expressive of a forceful and definite policy on the part of Congress respecting the employment of injunctions in labor controversies.

The first paragraph expressly prohibits Federal courts and judges in controversies between employers and employees from issuing injunctions or restraining orders in labor disputes, except where irreparable injury to property or to a property right will result, or where there is no adequate remedy at law, and requires that such property or property right must be described with particularity in the application.

The Attorney General by suing in the name of the United States seeks technically to escape the direct effect of this inhibition, and of the provision in paragraph 2 of section 20 which affirms the right of laborers to strike and to carry on singly or in concert the peaceful methods usually pursued, namely, ceasing from employment, recommending, advising, or persuading others to do so; attending at places lawful for the purpose of obtaining information and advice, or for the purpose of peacefully persuading others to work or abstain from work, and so forth.

This paragraph also expressly affirms the right to pay or give strikers strike benefits or other rewards, and expressly denies the right to enjoin strikers from peaceably assembling in a lawful manner and for lawful purposes, or from doing other things which might lawfully be done in the absence of such dispute.

The Attorney General has sought to avoid all these limitations on the power of Federal courts to issue injunctions in labor controversies by proceeding on behalf and in the name of the United States Government. He has sought to employ in the controversy the power, prestige, and influence of the Government with all its agents and instrumentalities for the carriers who have themselves openly and repeatedly violated decisions by the Labor Board in behalf of the workers, and who peremptorily declined the President's first proposal submitted for the settlement of the strike.

It will be recalled that the President, acting as a voluntary mediator, after conferring with many Senators, particularly the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], as reported in the press, submitted a proposal to the representatives of the shopmen and to the railway executives for the immediate termination of the strike. It was in substance that both the railway executives and the employees should agree to obey the decisions of the Labor Board hereafter rendered; that the shopmen should immediately resume work with their seniority unimpaired; and that the Labor Board should hear again and decide anew the wage dispute involved. The question of seniority, of course, originally was not involved in the strike, but arose out of it, and in a strange, not to say extraordinary, manner.

The Labor Board already had decided against the shopmen the wage dispute and had ordered a reduction, which was one of the immediate causes of the strike, when the President submitted this proposal.

According to the rules of seniority, which by practice and common consent have become a part of the custom regulating railway employment, the laborer who has been longest employed shall, within well-understood limits, enjoy the right to select his place of labor, and in cases where the force within his craft is increased be first restored to employment, and where it may be diminished be last dismissed from service. Seniority attaches to the railway service in all or nearly all its branches and is regarded by the laborers as a part of their compensation. When the shopmen went out on strike Chairman Hooper of the Labor Board announced as a penalty for their action that unless they returned to work within a short time all striking shopmen should be held to have forfeited their seniority, and if thereafter taken back would enter the service inferior in rank, not only to all who had continued and refused to strike but also to all strikebreakers employed to take the places of the striking shopmen. This immediately created a controversy more vexing and difficult than the original wage dispute.

The seniority issue was perhaps inevitable, but it was precipitated without a hearing and was regarded by the workers as a threat. It was seized upon by the railway executives as a sacred decision of the Labor Board which they had neither the power nor the disposition to override.

The shopmen's representatives, realizing the dangers in the seniority issue if the strike continued and the chances for a reversal of the decision respecting wage reductions growing out of widespread altered conditions, particularly relating to the scale of wages paid and prospective in other industries, promptly accepted the President's plan upon assurance from him that the executives would be urged, not to say coerced, into doing likewise. The railway executives, however, realizing the potentialities of the seniority issue as a factor in future labor disputes, took the responsibility for prolonging the strike and justified their refusal of the President's plan on the ground that to induce others to accept employment in place of the striking shopmen they had pledged the new employees seniority over the strikers, and to violate this pledge would constitute bad faith upon their part.

Thereupon the President, expressing resentment at the failure of the executives to accept his proposal, and thus to end the strike, submitted a second plan for settlement, which he must have anticipated the laborers would refuse. This plan was that the strikers should immediately return to work; that the wage controversy should be reheard and decided by the Labor Board; that the seniority issue should be determined by the board, and that the laborers and the employers should thereafter conform to decisions of the Labor Board.

Considering the fact that both the wage issue and the seniority question had already been determined against the workers, and that while the dictum of Chairman Hooper had not the full effect of a formal board decision, the workers under the President's second proposition took all the chances with little substantial prospect of winning either dispute, it is not surprising that they declined this proposition, submitted immediately following the refusal of the President's first proposition, which they had readily accepted, and that the strike continued.

The chiefs of the brotherhoods of trainmen, commonly referred to as the "Big Four," then volunteered to act as mediators, and arranged a conference with the railway executives, during the progress of which the President announced his purpose to appear before Congress in an address on the strike situation. The newspapers proclaimed that the prospects for a settlement were highly promising, and numerous leaders for the administration in Congress, some of them in this body, urged the President to defer his address, in the fear that it might operate to hamper or prevent a settlement. The President, however, without submitting recommendations to Congress for legislation to settle or terminate the railway strike, and expressly affirming that it was not possible to settle the strike by legislation to be enacted while the strike was in progress, and asserting that any legislation dealing with the subject must be considered at a time when passion and prejudice were not enthroned, persisted in his purpose and delivered an address on August 18, which apparently had the effect of breaking up the conference between the railway executives and the mediators for the shopmen. In any event, that conference failed, immediately following the delivery of the President's address, and all proposals were rejected.

Thereupon, at the instance of the President, the Attorney General, whose assistants had been engaged for weeks in preparing the complaint in this injunction case, filed the bill upon which the injunction under discussion was issued. Thus the shopmen, who had accepted the President's first proposal, are treated by the Government as outlaws, and the railway executives, who declined the President's proposal and made the President's efforts to settle the strike unsuccessful, are relieved of responsibility in the further conduct of the controversy. To say the least, the President and the Attorney General have placed between the railway managers and executives and the strikers the power of the Government an army of United States marshals and deputy marshals, and hold in the background in readiness to move the military and naval forces of the Government—all this in the name of law and order and for the administration of justice and impartiality.

DOES THE END JUSTIFY THE MEANS?

In this morning's press reports and in editorials published throughout the country we read that the injunction is too sweeping; that it exceeds the powers of the court which issued it; that it does restrain by the language used, when given its ordinary interpretation and application, the constitutional right of free speech and free press and the right peaceably to assemble; but the justification for this lawless act of the Chicago court is public necessity and public comfort and convenience.

The New York World, under date of September 2, 1922, in an editorial entitled "Daugherty's Injunction," discloses the sham, the pretense, and the injustice underlying the injunction in the shopmen's strike. This morning's Washington Post quotes the Attorney General as saying that the decent press of the United States, which is 90 per cent of the newspapers published in America, support his action, the inference being that the New York World and all newspapers edited by men who have the courage in the face of unpopularity to stand for the Constitution of the United States and the principles of human freedom are indecent. No newspaper that I have read has denied in an editorial, but on the contrary, by implication, the editorials have admitted that the injunction goes too far. Read the editorials in the Washington Star: "The injunction is too sweeping, but it can be modified."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I call his attention to the fact that the Baltimore Sun is universally recognized as one of the most independent and impartial of all our metropolitan papers, and the Baltimore Sun is condemning the injunction as vigorously as does the New York World.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, our people enjoy the services of a great many newspapers which have devoted their columns to right, justice, and the publishing of reliable news. No newspaper in the United States has more certainly, in the judgment of students of public questions, earned the title, and all that goes with it, of honest, fearless, newspaper than the New York World. It is a matter of common knowledge that so eagerly is that newspaper read by Senators that within an hour after the Senate has assembled it is difficult, if not impossible, to procure one of the four copies of that paper kept upon the table in the reading room for Senators. It is read more by Senators than any other two papers which come upon that table. Why? Because when officers of the United States Government are willing to prostitute their powers and their positions to the procurement of illegal process from the courts, that paper and others of equal courage stand up for right, declare for law. The Attorney General, by impliedly branding as indecent the New York World and the Baltimore Sun and other papers which in this controversy have spoken for justice, right, and liberty and in the name of humanity, can not destroy their reputation for honesty and fairness, nor can he give to them a reputation for indecency.

The New York World editorial to which I have referred will be printed in the RECORD following my remarks, in 8-point type, if I may have permission to that end. It points out the administration's efforts to obtain political advantage through a belated and questionable use of the injunction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Some are saying here in this Chamber, some are thinking while I am speaking: "The end justifies the means; the injunction is too sweeping, but the strike ought to be ended. The injunction will accomplish this. Therefore remain silent while the Constitution which we are sworn to uphold is disregarded." I have no disposition to control or advise the action of other Senators or of other representatives of the Government; but for my part, such declarations as that, such declarations as are now commonly heard, "Anything to stop the strike, lawful or unlawful, constitutional or unconstitutional," are fraught with more danger to the permanent safety of the Government and the institutions upon which it rests than all the strikes which have occurred or will happen while our flag flies.

No more dangerous doctrine can be announced. If constitutional limitations and safeguards and statutory provisions may be disregarded by the courts which were created to secure their observance, tyranny will supersede justice and liberty will be subordinated to public opinion. The courts first of all among our institutions must conform to the Constitution and the laws. No quicker, surer way of discrediting and undermining this Government can be pursued than to make court process independent of constitutional limitations and statutory restrictions and responsive readily to mere public convenience and opinion.

Lawless courts represent anarchy in its worst form. Nothing is to be feared from enemies who blatantly assail our institutions. Beware, however, of those who in the name of Americanism wink at the exercise of unlawful authority and condone violations of the Constitution and laws. These are the real, the dangerous enemies of liberty; the real foes of republican government.

The strike ought to be settled. The permanent freedom of commerce will be assured by adjustment of the disputes underlying the shopmen's strike, rather than by destroying the hopes and crushing the spirit of railway employees through an abuse of power by the Government.

The efforts of mediators to settle the strike following the President's failure and change of front are set forth in two circulars which I ask to be printed as a part of my remarks, and in connection therewith a further editorial from the New York World of Wednesday, September 6, 1922, entitled "Daugherty's delusion of grandeur." I ask that all these may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

Mr. ROBINSON. The injunction thus issued has had the effect and will continue, until modified or set aside, to have the effect of coercing the laborers into the acceptance of the Labor Board's decisions adverse to them, and of leaving the railroads apparently at liberty to disregard the rulings of the board at will. The sober final judgment of the lawyers of the United States and of our citizens generally will condemn this as oppressive and unjust.

This feature of the subject, this aspect of the injunction, I may take another occasion to discuss. The evidence shows that the railroads in numerous cases openly refused to obey the decisions of the Labor Board, and that the instant the employees took that course they encountered apparently the wrath of public opinion, certainly the power of all the agencies and instrumentalities of the Government of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is one remark which has been made by the Senator from Arkansas twice now, I think, to which I should like to call his attention. He indicates or intimates that the Government of the United States made no effort whatever to compel obedience on the part of the roads to the orders of the Labor Board. I think he is misinformed with regard to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator understood me to say that, he understood me to say nearly what I meant, and in proof of that statement I call his attention to the address of the President of the United States delivered on the 18th of August, in which he declared that in numerous instances the railway officials had violated the decisions of the Labor Board, but he did not know anything about it, and for that reason, except in one case which was called to the attention of the Department of Justice, no action had been taken to compel observance. I call to the attention of the Senator now that no mandatory process of a Federal court has been sought or employed, so far as public information goes, to require the railroad executives to submit to the same rule of obedience that is being applied to the workers.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not interrupt the Senator further. I did not get an opportunity to say what I wanted to say in that regard.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will read the address of the President of the United States he will see that prior to August 18, when that address was delivered, the railroad executives had in many cases violated the Railroad Labor Board's decisions, and the President pleads as an excuse for the failure of the Department of Justice to take some action to enforce those decisions the fact that the matter had not been brought to his knowledge and that he was ignorant of it, as undoubtedly he was, or he would not have said so. However, since the 18th of August last this injunction has been issued and men, known and unknown, laborers named and nameless, some organizations specified and other organizations not named, have been enjoined according to the terms of this writ from the exercise of what any lawyer must admit are their legal rights, as well as from the exercise of unlawful acts; and yet the Department of Justice has not moved, so far as the record shows, to apply to the railroad executives the rule that they must observe the Labor Board's decision, while all the power of the Government is in practical effect being employed and exerted to compel the workers to do what the executives are impliedly excused from doing. The sober final judgment of the lawyers of the United States and of the people of this country will condemn the extent to which the Chicago Federal court has abused its power and authority at the instance of the Attorney General, as oppressive and as inconsistent with the principles of liberty as expressed in the Constitution.

APPENDIX.

[From the New York World, Saturday, September 2, 1922.]

DAUGHERTY'S INJUNCTIONS.

Assuming that the railroad strike can be broken by writs of injunction, President Harding and his Attorney General are exactly two months late.

What was done yesterday might with considerable show of justification have been done on July 1, when the shopmen struck by way of protest against the decision of the Railroad Labor Board reducing their wages.

Mr. Harding made no effort to uphold the Labor Board at that time. Having allowed various railroads to flout it, he apparently thought the balance could be comfortably restored by permitting the unions to flout it.

Since that time Mr. Harding has made practically all the blunders that could have been made in dealing with a serious industrial situation. He has never failed to meddle whenever it was possible by meddling to make a bad matter worse. He has never missed an opportunity to do the wrong thing. Now he has permitted the Attorney General to rush into court with a petition for an injunction which is so sweeping that it will arouse the bitter resentment of organized labor in every part of the country.

When the transportation bill was before Congress an attempt was made to forbid railroad strikes on the ground that the railroad employees themselves were affected with a public interest and had no right to suspend a necessary service. Congress refused. Strikes were not forbidden in the act and the railroad unions were especially recognized as agencies with which the Labor Board was to deal in the adjustment of wages. Mr. Daugherty in his petition for a restraining order now seeks to enjoin the unions not only from acts which are clearly illegal under the laws of every State but from acts which are in themselves legal and are so implied by the statute itself in making the unions a party to the transportation act.

The Attorney General's injunction, even if it is made permanent, will not turn a wheel or wipe a joint. The shopmen's strike has been slowly settling itself for weeks. It might have been prevented altogether if the Harding administration had shown vigor and courage in sustaining the transportation law. Quite apart from that, there is reason to believe that it would have been adjusted weeks ago if the President had kept his hands off and maintained the policy of neutrality that he assumed at the beginning.

That anything substantial will come out of the Daugherty injunctions at this late day is more than improbable. The petition will inflame a great deal of passion and arouse much animosity. It will convince many of the strikers that the Government has finally assumed the rôle of a strike breaker and that unless they fight to a finish they will have lost everything for which organized labor has contended. It will arouse labor unions everywhere to active support of the shopmen.

There has been a great deal of violence, particularly in the West, in connection with this strike. No evidence has yet been produced to show that the shopmen's unions were responsible, and Mr. Daugherty himself makes no specific accusation against them. Yet he evidently believes that if a striker wrecks a train the proper thing to do is not to proceed against him for murder but to have him punished for contempt of court.

The President has been smarting under the criticism directed against him from all sides for his weak and vascillating policy during the strike. Something had to be done for political effect, so after the strike is two months old and conditions are steadily improving, the Attorney General is sent into court to paint up the Harding lath in an endeavor to make it look like iron.

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS, BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN, ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS, BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN, SWITCHMEN'S UNION OF NORTH AMERICA.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, August 30, 1922.

To the Officers and Members: Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen's Union of North America.

DEAR SIRS AND BROTHERS: In accordance with the request of Brother B. M. Jewell, president of the railway employees' department, American Federation of Labor, in behalf of our brother shopmen on strike, Brother W. S. Stone, chairman, called the 16 chief executives of the standard recognized railroad labor organizations to meet at Washington, D. C., the 11th instant.

The situation was presented in full by the seven chief executives of the shopmen, and the nine chief executives of the organizations not on strike were requested to act as mediators or do anything they could to compose the situation, and they signified their willingness to assist in every way possible.

A meeting with the President was arranged for and the nine executives met President Harding on the afternoon of the 12th. At this meeting the President had with him Secretaries Hoover and Davis, Senator Cummins and Chairman Hooper of the United States Railroad Labor Board. We urged the President to insist that the railroad companies accept his proposition, made July 31, to the effect that the entire controversy be resubmitted to the United States Railroad Labor Board without prejudice to either side, which meant that the shopmen resume work just as they stopped work, with all their rights, including seniority, unimpaired.

The President said he was unable to put his original proposition over, but that he was to meet a committee from the Railway Executives' Association, with Mr. T. DeWitt Cuyler as chairman, as soon as our meeting was over. We argued and plead with the President, as above indicated, without results. We remained with him until the committee representing the railroads arrived, when we retired, with the understanding that he (the President) would advise us further after his meeting with the railroad executives. This same evening we were advised that he had not been successful in inducing the railroad presidents to change their position, that they were willing to send the shopmen's rules and working conditions back to the Labor Board, but they positively refused to restore seniority to men on strike.

We had requested President Harding, in the event he failed to get satisfactory results from his meeting with the railroad presidents, that he endeavor to bring about a meeting between the committee of railroad presidents and the mine executives representing the men not on strike.

We were notified that the committee of railroad presidents would meet the five executives of the transportation group, and we were requested to meet them at once at the Willard Hotel. This meeting was held with no results.

We met President Harding the afternoon of the 14th, and he advised that he had not been able to induce the railroad presidents to change their attitude, and that he could do nothing more.

The railroad presidents had left Washington, but being unwilling to cease our efforts, the following letter was prepared:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 15, 1922.

Mr. THOMAS DEWITT CUYLER,
Chairman Association of Railway Executives,
Care of Col. Alfred P. Thom, Vice Chairman,
Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CUYLER: Strike conditions are rapidly arriving at a critical stage, and in a final effort to find some solution for the present trouble, we ask that you call your committee together again at the earliest moment and meet with the executives of the transportation brotherhoods.

Will you kindly advise Mr. Stone, Hotel Powhatan, of the time we may expect this committee, if you convene them?

Yours very truly,

W. S. STONE,
Grand Chief Engineer Brotherhood Locomotive Engineers.
L. E. SHEPPARD,
President Order of Railway Conductors.
W. N. DOAK,
Vice President Brotherhood Railroad Trainmen.
D. B. ROBERTSON,
President Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.
T. C. CASHEN,
President Switchmen's Union of North America.

We were advised that they were willing to meet us, but requested that the meeting be held in New York, and designating the 17th as the date. Meetings were held on the 17th and 18th, and no progress was made, due to the continued refusal of the railroad executives to agree to our suggestions regarding seniority. We contended throughout that the fundamental rights of men on strike, including their seniority in full when they resumed work, should be recognized.

When these efforts also failed we requested Chairman Cuyler to convene the entire membership of the Railway Executives' Association, which was agreed to, and said association was convened in New York on the 23d. We appeared before those in attendance on the 23d, about 200 in number. We reviewed the entire controversy and offered a suggestion as follows:

MEMORANDUM.

First. All men to be reinstated in the position of the class they originally held on June 30, 1922, and as many of such men as possible are to be put to work September 1, at present rates of pay and all employees who have been on strike to be put to work, or under pay, not later than October 1 next, except such men as have been proven guilty of destruction of railroad property or convicted of crime; ordinary cases of assault and battery the result of personal encounter are to be disregarded.

Second. If a dispute arises as to the relative standing of an employee or employees that can not be otherwise adjusted by the carrier and said employee or employees, the matter shall be referred to the United States Railroad Labor Board in accordance with the transportation act of 1920, by the organization, the employees, or the carrier, in the interest of any employee who may be aggrieved.

Third. No intimidation nor oppression shall be practiced or permitted as against any of the employees who have remained or taken service or as against those who resume service under this understanding.

Fourth. All suits at law now pending as the result of the strike to be withdrawn and canceled by both parties.

We refrained in all our written communications from using the word "seniority" conspicuously, for reasons which should be obvious.

We explained to all present that the shopmen had not seen our "suggestion" as shown above, but if accepted we would do our best to induce the shopmen to accept it.

When we presented our suggestion we requested that if it was not accepted by the body, we be advised how many, if any, representatives would meet us for further consideration of the subject. Action by the entire body was quickly taken and rejected by the entire body, with but one president voting in favor of our suggestion. We were told, however, that the presidents of 52 roads, representing 85,000 miles of track, were desirous of continuing negotiations and had appointed a committee of six to meet with us for this purpose.

The committee selected was President Willard, Baltimore & Ohio, chairman, and Presidents Holden, Burlington System; Smith, New York Central; Donnelly, Northern Pacific; Byram, Milwaukee; and Maher, Norfolk & Western, representing the following roads:

Alabama & Vicksburg; Vicksburg, Shreveport & Pacific; Baltimore & Ohio System; Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh; Chesapeake & Ohio Lines; Chicago & Northwestern System; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System; Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul System; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific System; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha; Erie System: Hocking Valley; Lake Erie & Western; El Paso & Southwestern; Lehigh & New England; Louisiana & Arkansas; Minneapolis & St. Louis; New York Central System; New York, Chicago & St. Louis; Norfolk & Western System; Norfolk Southern System; Northern Pacific System; Rutland Railroad; Seaboard Air Line System; Trinity & Brazos Valley; Virginian Railroad; Wheeling & Lake Erie; Winston-Salem Southbound.

After prolonged conferences we presented as our final recommendation the following suggestion as a basis of settlement for the roads represented by this committee:

"In order to bring the existing strike of shop employees upon the undersigned railroads to an end and relieve the country from the adverse effects thereof and expedite the movement of essential traffic, the following memorandum of agreement is made upon the understanding, which the parties hereto accept, that the terms hereof shall be carried out in a spirit of conciliation and sincere purpose to effect a genuine settlement of the matters in controversy referred to below.

"1. All men to return to service in positions of the class they originally held on June 30, 1922, and as many of such men as possible are to be put to work September 1, at present rates of pay, and all employees who have been on strike to be put to work or under pay not later than October 1 next, except such men as have been guilty of proven acts of violence.

"2. If a dispute arises as to the relative standing of an employee or employees, or any other controversy arises that can not be otherwise adjusted by the carrier and said employee or employees, the matter shall be referred for final decision to a commission to be established and constituted as hereinafter provided, by the organization, the employees or the carrier, in the interest of any employees who may be aggrieved.

"3. The commission referred to in paragraph 2 hereof shall be comprised of the five chief officers of the train service brotherhoods and five railroad officers experienced in matters of this kind and selected from among the railroads agreeing hereto. This commission shall be constituted forthwith upon the signing of this agreement and shall have jurisdiction to decide all cases that may be referred to it on or before May 31, 1923, but not thereafter.

"4. Inasmuch as this agreement is reached for the purpose of composing this controversy on the railroads signing the same with the shop crafts on strike, in a spirit of compromise, all parties hereto agree that neither this settlement nor any decision of the commission above provided for shall be used or cited in any other controversy between these parties or between the railroads signing the same or any other class or classes of their employees, in any other controversy that may hereafter arise.

"5. No intimidation nor oppression shall be practiced or permitted as against any of the employees who have remained or have taken service or as against those who resume service under this understanding.

"6. All suits at law now pending as the result of the strike to be withdrawn and canceled by both parties."

It will be noted that in this last suggestion or recommendation the word "seniority" does not appear, but when it was explained to the committee of railroad presidents that paragraph No. 1 meant full restoration of seniority in a short time they refused to agree; the shopmen did not accept our recommendation because we could not obtain any definite assurance that the striking shopmen's seniority would be restored, and on the morning of the 25th we advised both sides that we had nothing further to suggest in the following letter:

NEW YORK CITY, August 25, 1922.

Mr. DANIEL WILLARD,
Chairman Committee Railway Executives.
Mr. B. M. JEWELL,
President Railway Department, A. F. L., City.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, together with the chief executives of the other standard recognized railroad labor organizations not on strike, on invitation of the representatives of the shopmen and others on strike which began July 1 last, offered their good offices as mediators in the controversy with the hope that a mutually acceptable settlement might be reached, with regard to the one particular question which seemed to be the only stumbling block, viz, the fundamental rights of men on strike and their seniority standing when they resumed work.

The offer was accepted and an interview was sought with President Harding and conferences with the President were held on the 12th instant, the question being presented to him from all angles. The President met a committee representing the Railway Executives' Association following his meeting with us on the 12th. He also met them on Sunday, the 13th, but no progress toward settlement was made, but we were advised from the White House that the committee representing the railway executives were willing to meet the chief executives of the train and enginemen's organizations, since which date mediation has been conducted by those whose signatures appear hereto.

The nine chief executives also met President Harding on the afternoon of the 14th, and inasmuch as nothing had been accomplished at the Washington meeting the mediators came to New York and conferred with a committee of the railway executives on the 17th and 18th instants, but these efforts brought no satisfactory results.

Fully appreciating the seriousness of the situation confronting the people of the United States and with the determination to use every possible effort and every ounce of energy at our command, we requested a conference with the entire body comprising the Railway Executives' Association, which was at once arranged for, to be held in New York the 23d.

At this meeting we presented the subject as briefly but as explicitly as we could, and made a recommendation for consideration by the entire body. Coupled with the recommendation was a request that if it were not accepted we would be glad to meet such members of the Executive Association as might look upon it with favor, or who would meet with us in further efforts to reach a solution of the problem. We were later advised that the recommendation was declined practically unanimously, but that the chief executives representing 52 railroads with approximately 85,000 miles of track were willing to meet us to give further consideration to the subject.

Conferences with a committee consisting of six railroad presidents, representing this group, were held on the evening of the 23d, also two conferences on the 24th, and again this morning, without avail.

While the conferences with both sides were most pleasant, we found we could not present a recommendation acceptable to both, because both parties insisted throughout that their respective contentions were based on principles which could not be set aside and which must be observed at all cost.

We reluctantly notify all concerned that we consider further efforts futile and with much regret announce that we have nothing more to suggest.

We are transmitting a copy of this letter to the President of the United States and Mr. T. DeWitt Cuyler, chairman Railway Executives' Association, and to the press.

Most sincerely,

L. E. SHEPPARD,
President Order Railway Conductors.
W. N. DOAK,
Vice President Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.
W. S. STONE,
Grand Chief Engineer Brotherhood Locomotive Engineers.
D. B. ROBERTSON,
President Brotherhood Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.
T. C. CASHEN,
President Switchmen's Union of North America.

We have given much detail that all may be fully advised. Our efforts as mediators failed. It appears to be a fight to the finish between the railroad companies and the shopmen.

Our members are again cautioned as to becoming involved. Follow instructions heretofore given to the letter.

Fraternally yours,

W. S. STONE,
Grand Chief Engineer Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
L. E. SHEPPARD,
President Order of Railway Conductors.
D. B. ROBERTSON,
President Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES' DEPARTMENT,
August 8, 1922.

SPECIAL CIRCULAR.

Greetings: We are herewith submitting for your information the correspondence exchanged between President Harding and this department, and between the President and the Association of Railway Executives. You are urgently requested to give the widest possible publicity to the contents of this circular:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., July 31, 1922, 1.27 p. m.

B. M. JEWELL,
President Railway Employees Department,
American Federation of Labor, Chicago, Ill.:

I am hereby conveying to you the terms of agreement upon which the railway managers and United Shopcraft Workers are to unite preliminary to calling off the existing strike. First, railway managers and workmen are to agree to recognize the validity of all decisions of the Railroad Labor Board and to faithfully carry out such decisions as contemplated by the law. Second, the carriers will withdraw all lawsuits growing out of the strike, and Railroad Labor Board decisions which have been involved in the strike may be taken, in the exercise of recognized rights by either party, to the Railroad Labor Board for rehearing. Third, all employees now on strike to be returned to work and to their former positions with seniority and other rights unimpaired. The representatives of the carriers and the representatives of the organizations especially agree that there will be no discrimination by either party against the employees who did or did not strike. I think it is fair to say that I have changed the second condition from the original form in which it was discussed with you and your associates. You will note that I have suggested that appeals for rehearing may be taken "in the exercise of recognized rights by either party" to the board for rehearing. This does not change the substance, but I thought it only fair to have the statement apply to either side of the controversy alike. I hope you and your associates will see fit to express your approval to the terms submitted. Confirmation follows by mail.

WARREN G. HARDING.

JULY 31, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. CUYLER: I am writing to convey to you the terms of agreement, as I understand them, upon which the railway managers and United Shopcraft Workers are to agree, preliminary to calling off the existing strike.

First. Railway managers and workmen are to agree to recognize the validity of all decisions of the Railroad Labor Board and to faithfully carry out such decisions as contemplated by the law.

Second. The carriers will withdraw all lawsuits growing out of the strike, and Railroad Board decisions which have been involved in the strike may be taken, in the exercise of recognized rights by either party, to the Railroad Labor Board for rehearing.

Third. All employees now on strike to be returned to work and to their former positions with seniority and other rights unimpaired. The representatives of the carriers and the representatives of the organizations especially agree that there will be no discrimination by either party against the employees who did or did not strike.

In view of the things said in our personal interview it is hardly necessary for me to emphasize my belief in the wisdom of the railway managers accepting this compromise in order to bring the strike to an end. I have made a very full appraisal of all the embarrassments involved in making the seniority restoration. It has seemed to me that the proposition that the order of things on the day the strike began be restored, and that both employers and workers agree against discrimination toward either those who struck or did not strike, will leave to the managers only the difficult problem of dealing with the new men employed. It would be futile for me to attempt to point the way of most easily solving that difficulty. I have only attempted to appraise the situation from the larger viewpoint. It seems to me that such a settlement brings, first of all, the restoration to normal operations in transportation for which the country is calling. In the second place, it establishes definitely the full recognition of the Railroad Labor Board by all parties concerned. I have not specifically stated it in the terms of settlement; but, of course, the abandonment of the contract system, in accordance with the decision of the board, is to be expected on the part of all railroads. It is wholly unthinkable that the Railroad Labor Board can be made a useful agency of the Government in maintaining industrial peace in the railway service unless employers and workers are both prompt and unquestioning in their acceptance of its decisions. I think it is more desirable than I know how to express to have established the unchallenged authority of the Railroad Labor Board, because we must do those things which are necessary to bring about the recognition of suitable authority to decide and end such disputes as menace the continuity of transportation.

You are at liberty to present the situation as I have outlined it to you, and I hope you will convey to the members my deep conviction that this dispute must be brought to an early termination. I need hardly add that I have reason to believe these terms will be accepted by the workers. If there is good reason why the managers can not accept they will be obligated to open direct negotiations or assume full responsibility for the situation.

With very best regards, I am, very truly yours,

(Signed) WARREN G. HARDING.

AUGUST 3, 1922.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR PRESIDENT: The following in confirmation of my wire of the 2d.

Your terms of agreement for settling the present controversies between the railroad managements and employees, as embodied in your telegram under date of July 31, 1922, have been presented to a meeting of the general conference committee held in Chicago, and acted upon as follows:

The representatives of the employees feel themselves under obligation to support every proper effort on the part of the Government to bring about or to preserve the uninterrupted operation of the transportation industry. The stubborn refusal of the railway executives to establish a board of adjustment, as contemplated by law, in order to settle efficiently disputes over rules and working conditions between the carriers and their employees; the continued refusal of railways, representing over a quarter of the mileage of class 1 railroads, to comply with the decisions of the Railroad Labor Board against the practice of contracting out work and shops; the persistent campaign to deny to the railway employees just and reasonable wages, to impose upon them unfair working conditions and to disintegrate their organizations; all in cumulative effect rendered service by railway employees under the terms and conditions to be effective July 1, 1922, intolerable to over 95 per cent of these employees, who, therefore, voted to suspend work.

It is now proposed that they return to work, temporarily accepting wages and working conditions which they feel to be unjust, with reliance upon the following program for redress of grievances:

"First. Railway managers and workmen are to agree to recognize the validity of all decisions of the Railroad Labor Board and to faithfully carry out such decisions as contemplated by the law."

The employees have always taken the position that as long as they continued to render service they should abide by the rules and working conditions and accept the wages agreed upon by proper negotiation or determined by the Labor Board after a hearing of a dispute upon any of these matters. They respectfully point out again that violations of law, and refusals to comply with decisions of the Labor Board, have been exhibited only by the railway managements, and that it has been universally admitted that the employees in exercising their right to suspend work under nonacceptable conditions were neither violating the law nor the decisions of the board.

We understand that the recognition of "the validity of all decisions of the Railroad Labor Board, as contemplated by the law," means, for example, that in the case of the Pennsylvania Railroad all employees will return to work under the wages and working conditions established in the decisions of the Labor Board, and that the sole question of "validity" pending is the authority of the Labor Board to determine as in decision No. 218 the method of selecting accredited representatives of the employees, assuming that the railroad has appealed from the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which sustained the action of the Labor Board.

"Second. The carriers will withdraw all lawsuits growing out of the strike, and Railroad Labor Board decisions which have been involved in the strike may be taken, in the exercise of recognized rights by either party, to the Railroad Labor Board for rehearing."

It is our understanding that the representatives of the employees, upon seeking a rehearing of the controverted decisions concerning wages and working conditions, will be afforded a prompt rehearing and decision by the Labor Board. We assume also that the practically unanimous action of the employees in electing to suspend work and in continuing this suspension under the sanction of, and in accordance with the laws of, their national organizations has ended any captious questioning as to who are the properly accredited spokesmen of the vast majority of railway employees. We desire to call attention to the orderly and disciplined conduct of these employees under difficult conditions, which has demonstrated the indispensable value of their national organizations in aid of the effective adjustment of controversies and the efficient conduct of the industry.

"Third. All employees now on strike to be returned to work and to their former positions with seniority and other rights unimpaired. The representatives of the carriers and of the organizations especially agree that there will be no discrimination by either party against the employees who did or did not strike."

We are glad to observe that the obvious justice of this proposition has been accepted. It would certainly be a wholesale injustice of unparalleled extent if hundreds of thousands of experienced men, who have given 4 to 40 years' service and whose value to the transportation industry is proportioned to the length of their service, should be placed in a position of inferiority to a limited number of men who have been employed as substitutes for these experienced railroad workers. The demand that such a wrong should be perpetrated as a penalty against men who have exercised a fundamental and admitted right not to render service under nonacceptable conditions was so unfair that we could not believe it would receive the sanction of any impartial judgment.

We understand the language "All employees now on strike" to include all employees who hold seniority rights under the rules agreed upon between the carriers and the organizations of employees or as promulgated by the United States Railroad Labor Board.

It should be understood that in acting favorably upon these proposals for settlement of the pending controversies the representatives of the organized employees feel that they are making concessions and sanctioning sacrifices on the part of the employees which entitle them to the highest consideration and to recognition as law-abiding American citizens, who are ready and willing to do all in their power, even beyond that which is strictly reasonable, in order to promote industrial peace and to further the uninterrupted flow of the commerce of the Nation.

We see evidence of little sacrifice required on the part of the managements to whom like proposals have been submitted. They will suffer no loss in abandoning a host of futile lawsuits, complaining of wrongs which have never been committed. It is understood that the Labor Board must confirm its previously announced position and that the railways must abandon the condemned practice of contracting out work and shops and restore the employees to their former status. It should be noted that this practice is not only a violation of the transportation act and of the decisions of the board, but, as shown by many decisions of the courts, is a violation of the charter obligations of the railroads and would have been unlawful without the passage of the transportation act or any action by the Labor Board.

We understand that an effort will be made to insure the setting up of a board of adjustment, but inasmuch as such a board can function effectively only with the full cooperation of both managements and employees, we can look merely with hope, and not with certainty, for the establishment of this "essential part of the machinery to decide disputes between the carriers and their employees." In the meantime, upon advice from you of the expressed acceptance of your terms of agreement contained in your telegram of July 31, by all carriers, we will take the responsibility of directing the employees to return to work, and upon the confidence that by action of the Labor Board upon rehearing of the recent controverted decisions a delayed justice will be rendered to the employees in the matter of wages and working conditions.

We should certainly assume that the railway executives in their own obvious interest eventually will accept the proposals made, unless their counsels are dominated sufficiently by antilabor forces to resist even the pressure of public opinion exerted through your high office and to carry on to the bitter end a nihilistic policy of attempting to destroy the self-protecting, democratic institutions of organized labor. We can hardly believe that such a counsel of folly will finally prevail within the railroad managements. It therefore appears that upon the organizations of railway executives and employees rests the immediate responsibility of serving the public interests in bringing about a resumption of efficient operation of the railroads. Under pressure of this responsibility, we have voted by the requisite constitutional majority to accept the terms of agreement which you have submitted to us. We accept reluctantly, it is true, but commit ourselves to carry out the terms of settlement in utmost good faith and in aid of the general welfare. If these proposals fail to bring about the results which you desire, the responsibility of failure will not rest upon the representatives of the organized employees.

By order general conference committee.

President, Railway Employees' Department.

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, August 1, 1922.

Hon. WARREN G. HARDING,
President of the United States,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

I am instructed to transmit to you the resolutions adopted by the Association of Railway Executives at its meeting to-day, as follows:

"Resolved (1) That we accept the first recommendation of the President, reading as follows:

"'First. Railway managers and workmen are to agree to recognize the validity of all decisions of the Railroad Labor Board, and to faithfully carry out such decisions as contemplated by the law.'

"With the understanding that this is not intended to preclude any party to a controversy from proceeding by legal action to question the validity of any order of the board on the ground that jurisdiction and authority to make the order was not conferred by the statutes creating the board and defining its authority.

"(2) That we accept the second proposal of the President, reading as follows:

"'Second. The carriers will withdraw all lawsuits growing out of the strike, and Railroad Labor Board decisions which have been involved in the strike may be taken, in the exercise of recognized rights by either party, to the Railroad Labor Board for rehearing.'

"With the understanding that the strike is first called off, and the representatives of the strikers pledge themselves and the strikers against violence in any form against the men now at work and the property of the carriers, since otherwise it would be impossible to consider the dismissal of injunctions and other legal measures necessary to protect such persons and property from the violence and intimidation of the character resorted to in many localities since the strike was called.

"(3) That it is impossible to agree to the first sentence of the third proposal of the President, the whole of which reads as follows:

"'Third. All employees now on strike to be returned to work and to their former positions with seniority and other rights unimpaired. The representatives of the carriers and the representatives of the organizations especially agree that there will be no discrimination by either party against the employees who did or did not strike.'

"The railroad executives and managers agree entirely with the President's statement in his letter that it is wholly unthinkable that the Railroad Labor Board can be made a useful agency of the Government in maintaining industrial peace in the railway service unless employers and workers are both prompt and unquestioning in their acceptance of its decisions.

"I think it is more desirable than I know how to express to have established the unchallenged authority of the Railroad Labor Board, because we must do those things which are necessary to bring about the recognition of suitable authority to decide and end such disputes as menace the continuity of transportation.

"By this language the President has expressed with great force and clearness the policy which we advocate. But the decisions of the Railroad Labor Board were flouted and defied by the six organizations comprising the Federated Shop Crafts; the strike was called to take effect July 1, 1922, and even the summons of the board to appear with the railroad executives before the Labor Board, after the strike was called and before it took effect, was contemptuously ignored by the leaders of the strikers, who refused to attend the hearing. Thereupon it became the plain duty of the railroads actively and vigorously to undertake to uphold the orderly processes for the adjustment of industrial disputes contemplated by the statute creating the Labor Board, and represented by the decisions of that board against which the strike in question was directed, and at the same time continue to the best of their ability to discharge their duty to the public as common carriers.

"Many men in the service refused to join the strike and in so doing were assured of the seniority rights accruing to them and of the permanence of their positions. On some important lines 50 per cent or more refused to join the strike. To these old loyal employees have been added thousands of new men who were employed and could be secured only upon a definite promise that their services would be retained regardless of the settlement of the strike, with all the rights appertaining to such employment, including that of seniority under the working rules and regulations previously approved by the Railroad Labor Board. We especially point out that a refusal to the old men who remained in the service and to the new men who accepted service of the rights of seniority incident to their employment would have just the opposite effect to that desired by the President, and would most seriously discredit the Labor Board. The board itself prescribed the rules of seniority under which the men referred to have secured their seniority rights, and the railroad companies have neither the legal nor moral right to deprive these men of those rights. By public utterances since the strike began the board has recognized and emphasized these rights, and to deny them now would, instead of upholding the authority of the Labor Board, overthrow its rules and discredit its authority.

"The chairman of the Labor Board at the time the strike was called made the following public statement:

"'Upon one question the striking employees should not be deceived; their leader has said that the strikers are no longer employees of the railways, and they have thus automatically abandoned all the rights they possess under their agreements and under the decisions of the board, including their seniority. This is not the board's action. It is their own.

"'Many carriers are giving their former employees the opportunity to reenter the service within a limited time. It must be understood now that men who remained in the service and those who are now entering it will have rights of seniority that the board could not ignore.'

"The chairman of the board's statement that—

"'This is an individual utterance, but it expresses, in substance, the sentiments of a large majority of the members of the Railroad Labor Board.'

"Was justified by formal action of the board taken in its resolution of July 3, 1922, which stated, among other things, as follows:

"'Be it further resolved, That the employees remaining in the service and the new ones entering same be accorded the application and benefit of the outstanding wage and rule decisions of the Railroad Labor Board until they are amended or modified by agreements with said employees, arrived at in conformity with the transportation act, or by decision of this board, and be it further

"'Resolved, That, if it be assumed that the employees who leave the service of the carrier because of their dissatisfaction with any decisions of the Labor Board are within their rights in so doing, it must likewise be conceded that the men who remain in the service and those who enter it anew are within their rights in accepting such employment, that they are not strike breakers seeking to impose the arbitrary will of an employer on employees; that they have the moral as well as the legal right to engage in such service of the American public to avoid interruption of indispensable transportation, and that they are entitled to the protection of every department and branch of the Government, State and National.'

"It must be understood that any proposal that employees now on strike shall be permitted to return to the service, without impairment of their seniority, is merely another way of suggesting that these men who took employment in this crisis in good faith, relying on the promises of the railroads to protect them in their positions, these promises being justified by the authoritative utterances of the Labor Board, and thus have made possible the continued operation of the railroads, shall now be sacrificed in favor of men now on strike, who not only brought about the crisis but by their own action and declaration are no longer employees of the railways, under the jurisdiction of the United States Railroad Labor Board, or subject to the application of the transportation act.

"In addition to the necessity of upholding the Labor Board, and maintaining the pledges by the railroads to the men now at work, there is the practical effect on the supervisory officers of a violation of the pledges they were authorized to make. Much harm has already been done by repeated publication of rumors in recent days that the loyal men and the new men are to be sacrificed to the strikers. This has discouraged new men from accepting employment in as great numbers as would come forward if certain that the pledges given would be fulfilled. Such published rumors only delay the collapse of the strike.

"In view of the above, it is submitted that the striking former employees can not be given preference to employees at present in the service, without doing violence to every principle of right and justice involved in this matter and without the grossest breach of faith on the part of the railroads to the men at present in their service. Under these circumstances, it becomes apparent that the railroads can not consider any settlement of the present strike which does not provide protection in their present employment both to the loyal employees who remained in the service and to the new employees entering it."

I am sending you by mail a copy of the resolutions and a letter giving in detail the roads represented at the meeting.

THOMAS DEWITT CUYLER,
Chairman Association of Railway Executives.

Respectfully submitted.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES' DEPARTMENT,
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

JOHN SCOTT, Secretary-Treasurer.

[From the New York World, Wednesday, September 6, 1922.]

DAUGHERTY'S DELUSION OF GRANDEUR.

Part of Mr. Daugherty's ailment is undoubtedly the delusion of grandeur. He has suddenly come to regard himself as the heroic champion of the open shop and has muddled the entire railroad situation in an endeavor to give to his personal economic theories the force of law.

By the Attorney General's own admissions, one of the main objects of the Daugherty injunction is to maintain the open shop. In his address to the court Mr. Daugherty said:

"But it may be understood that so long and to the extent that I can speak for the Government of the United States I will use the power of the Government to prevent the labor unions of the country from destroying the open shop."

Mr. Daugherty might with equal authority of the Constitution have said that to the extent that he could speak for the Government of the United States no flapper would be allowed to wear skirts that were more than 6 inches from the floor. It is none of Mr. Daugherty's business as Attorney General whether shops are open or closed. It is none of his business whether industry is carried on exclusively by members of trades-unions or exclusively by people who do not belong to trades-unions.

All these matters of economic adjustment must be settled in the long run by employer and employee. They can not be settled by Government, or Government will break down under the stupendous burdens that it usurps. Least of all can they be settled by the process of injunction. Whenever Government gets very far away from its primary function, which is the protection of life and property, it is certain to mire itself, and that is what the Attorney General has done to it in this case.

So far as labor unions are concerned, the right of organization has been formally declared by Congress in the Clayton Act. So far as the unions are concerned in the railroad strike, the transportation act, which was passed by a Republican Congress, specifically recognized them as one of the agencies through which the Government must deal in helping to determine the rate of wages. Why the Attorney General should have dragged his open-shop theories into this controversy is one of the mysteries of the "best minds" which the ordinary intellect is incapable of fathoming.

When President Harding went before Congress August 18 to tell his troubles to the country he made various recommendations which he begged the legislative branch not to carry out, inasmuch as "the legal safeguarding against like menaces in the future must be worked out when no passion sways, when no prejudice influences, when the whole problem may be appraised." Then he permitted his Attorney General to attempt to do by writs of injunction what he urged Congress not to attempt to do by means of legislation. Nothing could be more bewildering.

Some day Mr. Daugherty ought to take an hour or two and read the Constitution of the United States. If he read it carefully, he would discover that the Federal Government is not omnipotent; that it was never intended to be omnipotent; and that by inference the Attorney General of the United States is not omnipotent. Had he known that much at the outset he might have spared the Harding administration one of the stupidest blunders it has committed out of a record of innumerable stupid blunders.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, before the Senator from Arkansas takes his seat——

Mr. ROBINSON. I will rise again, if the Senator does not mind.

Mr WATSON of Indiana. I asked the Senator from Arkansas in the midst of his address, and then desisted at his request, as to whether he objected to the fact that any injunctive proceedings had been requested at all or to their extent?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is an academic question not related intimately or inseparably to the subject matter of my discussion and to the principles involved in this injunction. I am not going to take the position that under the precedents the courts have not power to issue injunctions in labor disputes. I am willing to say, however, that from my study of the subject they have been too ready to issue injunctions in labor controversies and not quite quick enough to issue extraordinary process in cases of violations of the antitrust law of the United States.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I, then, understand from the Senator's remarks that he does not criticize the court for having issued an injunction, but——

Mr. ROBINSON. I decline, after having spoken for an hour and a half, to enter upon an interpretation of my own remarks. The Senator from Indiana is at liberty to place upon my remarks any construction that he thinks they justify. I know his intelligence and his fairness will prevent him from either misconceiving or misrepresenting me.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. What I want to get at is this——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall decline to be cross-examined by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am not seeking to cross-examine the Senator. I was simply leading up to a final question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Indiana may take the floor and state his position in his own time and in his own language.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I was not seeking to catechize the Senator, of course, in the form of cross-examination, but simply trying to get his viewpoint. I understand that the Senator does not find any fault with the fact that the Attorney General sought to have an injunction granted, and, furthermore, that he does not object to the fact that an injunction or a temporary restraining order was granted, but that he does object to the length to which it went. Therefore it is upon the narrow basis of the extent to which the order has gone and not the fact that it was issued or that the court lacked jurisdiction to act that his speech has been made.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana knows that down South the cotton planters are sometimes prosecuted by the Federal courts for what is called peonage. Those cases arise on facts like this: A negro goes to a white landowner and says in that persuasive way that a negro can adopt when he wants to, "Boss, I have not got anything to eat; my family is out of food; we have not got shoes; we have not got clothing. Won't you lend me $15 to buy something to support my family? If you will I will work it out for you." Then the planter advances the $15 and relieves the distress of the colored man. The colored man, however, does not want to work out the contract, and he leaves the farm. The planter follows the colored man, brings him back to the farm and says, in substance, "You must work out your contract." What is the difference in principle between the planter saying that to an individual negro and a lifetime Federal judge saying, in substance, the same thing to a railroad employee?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, there is no effort being made by anybody to compel the striking shop craft men to go back to work. Nobody can compel a man to work in this country if he does not want to work. There is nothing of that kind in the injunction. Nobody is pretending to do any such thing; nobody is assuming to have any authority to do any such thing. That is all there is to that.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield further to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, one may so surround a man with prohibitions not to do this, that, and the other, and so surround his neighbors and friends and the strangers with whom he comes in contact with prohibitions not to do this, that, and the other, that the man is forced either to work or starve.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into a discussion of the merits of this controversy. While of course, recognizing always the loftiness of the motives of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I very much deplore any discussion of this question at this time on the floor of the Senate of the United States. We are not trying this case on this floor, nor by Senators; nor is it to be tried either by the news or editorial columns of the press of the United States, as my friend has sought to lead us to believe. A temporary restraining order only has been granted on a petition filed by the Attorney General of the United States. A final hearing of the case is to be had on the 11th of September, next week, and, therefore, personally, without impugning the motives of anybody, I deplore any discussion that would have a tendency to influence the court in the final decision which is to be rendered on the 11th of September.

I do not know whether the court will modify the injunction or whether he will emphasize it or repeat it or renew it; I have not any idea what the court will do; but the courts are open to anybody who is aggrieved, and if the laboring men, the shop crafts, are dissatisfied with the decision, certainly they have their rights which they can take advantage of and exercise. Therefore, personally, I repeat I shall not enter upon an extended discussion of the merits of this controversy at all on the floor of the Senate, preferring to wait until after the decision. Then, if I believe, as the Senator from Arkansas says he believes—and he does believe it or he would not say it—that the court has exceeded its authority and that any injunction granted does interfere with personal liberty, as a matter of course I shall voice my protest, but until that time I regard it, with all due respect to my friend, as unseemly that this discussion should be had.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator understands that the temporary injunction is now in force?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON. And that it is in operation and will remain in operation until it is modified?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the court never sees fit to modify it, then, of course, its provisions will remain operative until they have served their purpose.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. They will.

Mr. ROBINSON. How does the Senator, in that view of the matter, find it unethical or unpatriotic or worthy of rebuke for a Senator to criticize what he asserts to be plain violations by the court of the Constitution of the United States which have already been put into effect for a time by the court, any more than he would find it consistent to condemn such criticism if they were put into effect for all time?

In other words, what is the difference in the principle involved? If a court for an hour, for a week, or until the controversy can be settled, through its power issues an injunction that is unlawful—if it is unlawful in this instance—and it is the duty of a lawmaker or of a citizen to protest it, it is just as much his duty when put into effect temporarily as when put into effect indefinitely or permanently.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, a great national crisis confronted the country. There was a nation-wide coal strike and a nation-wide railway strike. The people of the United States were threatened with freezing and with starvation and with unutterable disaster during the approaching winter. Every effort at negotiation and conciliation that human ingenuity could devise was made. Everybody worked at it. The President of the United States used his great authority and the power of his great office to bring the parties together with a view to settling both disputes. Outsiders volunteered to aid in the efforts at negotiation, and every step was taken that could be taken to bring about a settlement; but no settlement could be had. I am not here to discuss the merits of that proposition; I am not here to discuss the various steps that were taken leading up to the finality; but the conclusion was finally reached that negotiations were of no further value, and, therefore, something had to be done. The railroads were tied up in certain places in the country; the whole transportation system of the United States was threatened with paralysis. Under those circumstances the Attorney General, at, of course, the instance and request of the President of the United States, went into a Federal court for the purpose of asking for a temporary injunction or restraining order until the whole matter could be determined on its merits. It is now in that suspended condition, and until the court shall have finally determined as to what shall be done by way of injunctive relief I, for one, shall not discuss the question.

I wish merely to advert very briefly to one portion of my friend's speech. He has said that under section 20 of the Clayton Act that court had no authority whatever to grant this temporary restraining order, as I understood him, or that the court violated the law by granting this temporary restraining order. I want to read it, and, if I can, interpret it:

That no restraining order or injunction shall be granted by any court of the United States, or a judge or the judges thereof—

Mark you, when?

in any case between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, unless necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property, or to a property right, of the party making the application, for which injury there is no adequate remedy at law, and such property or property right must be described with particularity in the application, which must be in writing and sworn to by the applicant or by his agent or attorney.

The section recites—shall prohibit any person or persons, whether singly or in concert—

And so forth, and so forth. "No such restraining order"—what kind of restraining order? A restraining order between employers and employees, a restraining order sought by employer against employee or employee against employer. That is the only sort of a case to which section 20 refers.

Mr. STERLING. Or between employees.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Or between employees, limiting it altogether to employers and employees.

This case, I believe without knowing, was brought under section 15 of the Clayton Act, and I call the Senator's attention to section 15, which recites:

That the several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act, and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition, the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition, and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises. Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any such proceeding may be pending that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not, and subpœnas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, will my friend yield to me?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in the course of my remarks I stated that it was in an effort to escape the prohibitions of that statute that the Attorney General was prompted to proceed in the name of the United States instead of proceeding in the name of the real parties in interest, the railroads—the railroads whose operations it was alleged were being interfered with; but the Senator has read a statute which he says the Attorney General proceeded under, which gives the Federal courts authority to enjoin violations of law. I want to point out to the Senator that the acts enjoined, of which I have complained, are not violations of law, and therefore the statute that he has cited does not furnish a basis for procedure by the Attorney General.

Listen: The Clayton Act, section 20, of which the Senator from Indiana read that part which was applicable to sustain his position, and, of course, with no intention of overlooking a controlling declaration in the act, provides in its last clause, which the Senator refrained from reading, as follows:

Nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held to be violations of any law of the United States.

Not only does the Clayton Act expressly authorize labor organizations to proceed to strike in the usual and in the peaceful methods which the laws of the country have recognized from the beginning of the Government but it expressly provides that peaceful picketing, persuading, entreating, asking, or recommending others to refrain from employment, or to abandon employment, or the giving of strike rewards and benefits, are not only permitted in all controversies between employers and employees, and shall not be restrained in such proceedings, but they are not violations of the laws of the United States; and since the section which the Senator read merely authorizes courts to issue injunctions to prevent violations of certain laws, injunctions can not be issued in proceedings brought in the name of the United States for acts which by the law of Congress are declared to be not violations of law. It is no answer to the proposal. The Senator's argument answers itself. Laborers have a right under the law of Congress to strike and they have a right peacefully to do the things which are ordinarily done in the promotion of strikes, such as presenting their cases in public meetings in order that the public may be informed as to the principles and the rights, or the injustices, for that matter, underlying their cause, appearing in a peaceful manner where others are at work or about to go to work and asking them to refrain from acting as strike breakers or appealing in a peaceful way to the public to support their cause; and this act restrains the arm of the Federal courts from issuing injunctions in such cases and expressly provides that they shall not be regarded as violations of law. Therefore neither the United States nor any citizen of the United States can lawfully restrain laborers from performing those acts which Congress authorizes them to perform.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I disagree entirely with my honorable friend from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator will pardon me for saying that I neither experience nor express surprise at that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I presume that the Senator took that for granted in the beginning. I think section 20 very explicitly declares precisely what it means, and I think section 15 explicitly declares precisely what it means. Section 20 refers to contests between employers and employees, but does not in any respect bind the power of the Government of the United States or limit its authority to seek injunctive relief in cases of this character. I have not any doubt about that; but I am not going into the merits of it, as I have said before.

I want for a little while, however, to read into the RECORD the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in a case very nearly on all fours with this one, though the court did not go to the length that the United States district court has gone in this particular instance. That is the case of Eugene Debs, decided by Judge Brewer in One hundred and fifty-eighth United States Reports.

Mr. BORAH. That was decided before the Clayton Act.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; that was decided before the Clayton Act; but, nevertheless, I assume that the principle of injunctive relief involved was precisely the same there as here, so far as the injunction is concerned.

Mr. BORAH. What I meant to say was, the court found ample authority for justifying the proceedings without the Clayton Act.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; precisely. The Senator is entirely right in that suggestion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator if there is not a later case, the case of Duplex Printing Press, that bears on the same subject?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. There is one, but I will say to the Senator from Florida—and I read it this morning—that I do not regard it quite as clearly in point as the Debs case in the particulars that will enable me better to respond to my friend.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator understands, of course, that the Clayton Act was passed for the express purpose of meeting the principles asserted in certain decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Clayton Act was passed for the purpose of relieving labor unions and farm organizations and horticultural societies from the danger of prosecution under the Sherman antitrust law. The whole trend of the decisions since the Clayton Act has been to sustain the right of peaceful picketing. The Supreme Court of the United States has never since the Clayton Act, in any case within my knowledge, held that the act of Congress which assures to a laborer the right of peaceful picketing is an unwarranted or unauthorized exercise of the legislative power by Congress.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Of course, I may say in passing, although it has not anything to do with the merits of the case, that personally I do not believe in exempting labor organizations from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law or the Clayton Act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me there?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. While the Senator disavows belief in the principle of the law, he certainly does not urge that as a justification for violation of law.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. The courts are just as much bound to observe laws which the Senator from Indiana does not approve as they are to observe laws which the Senator from Indiana is prominent in supporting.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But, if the Senator will remember, I said that it had not anything to do with the case. I was expressing only my personal opinion.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wondered why the Senator said it if it had nothing to do with the case.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I said it in order to express my personal opinion about a statute in which I do not believe, and which, if I had my way, would be repealed; for, so far as I am concerned, there is no reason in the world for permitting a combination of laboring people to do a thing that a combination of business men would be subject to prosecution for if they did it.

Mr. ROBINSON. A great many have asserted the same opinion.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is my personal opinion. I am not going to argue it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not, either; but I just wanted to point out this fact: In this discussion, where the whole question is one of right, where the whole question is whether the court has exceeded its authority, where the whole question is whether the machinery of the court and the process of the court has been employed to restrain the constitutional rights of citizens it is strange that the Senator from Indiana should assert that in his opinion this law, which among other restraints imposed by the Constitution and laws I have claimed is violated by the court, is not to be justified in sound public policy. Of course, there are a great many who feel that way, and that is just the danger of such procedure as has taken place in this injunction suit. There is not any doubt in my mind but that at this time the people are so anxious to secure a settlement of the strike and get back to normalcy that they will wink at almost any process that may be employed when they have not had an opportunity of contemplating the effects upon the permanent enforcement of law and order. This law, whether its policy is approved by the Senator from Indiana, or by me, or by others, should be just as sacred in the eyes of a Federal Judge who has taken an oath to support and uphold the laws and the Constitution of the United States as if it met with the universal approval of the people of this Nation; and whenever you give consent that a court shall respond in violation of law in its process to public opinion you override the constitutional guaranties and limitations which were created for the purpose of preventing them from doing that very thing, and of protecting minorities against the force of public opinion, which under settled conditions and under normal conditions perhaps would be different but which, if it existed at all times, could not be controlling in the face of the law to the contrary.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, the Senator knows that I know very well that the mere fact I do not believe in a law is no excuse for its nonenforcement. I believe in the enforcement of all law, and I express merely my personal opinion about the value of this law.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator pardon an interruption there?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, I do not intend to criticize my friend the Senator from Indiana, but the very point I am making is that this proceeding is in response to a real or imaginary public opinion and in violation of the limitations fixed in the laws and in the Constitution.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do not in any respect agree that it is in violation of the law or that the court exceeded its authority or transgressed the limits of its jurisdiction.

I am going to read from this case somewhat in extenso, though I shall not make comments, as lawyers usually do in reading a decision. I read as follows:

> On presentation of it [the bill] to the court an injunction was ordered commanding the defendants "and all persons combining and conspiring with them, and all other persons whomsoever, absolutely to desist and refrain from in any way or manner interfering with, hindering, obstructing, or stopping any of the business of any of the following-named railroads [specially naming the various roads named in the bill] as common carriers of passengers and freight between or among any States of the United States, and from in any way or manner interfering with, hindering, obstructing, or stopping any mail trains, express trains, or other trains, whether freight or passenger, engaged in interstate commerce, or carrying passengers or freight between or among the States; and from in any manner interfering with, hindering, or stopping any trains carrying the mail; and from in any manner interfering with, hindering, obstructing, or stopping any engines, cars, or rolling stock of any of said companies engaged in interstate commerce, or in connection with the carriage of passengers or freight between or among the States; and from in any manner interfering with, injuring, or destroying any of the property of any of said railroads engaged in or for the purpose of, or in connection with, interstate commerce or the carriage of the mails of the United States or the transportation of passengers or freight between or among the States; and from entering upon the grounds or premises of any of said railroads for the purpose of interfering with, hindering, obstructing, or stopping any of said mail trains, passenger, or freight trains engaged in interstate commerce, or in the transportation of passengers or freight between or among the States, or for the purpose of interfering with, injuring, or destroying any of said property so engaged in or used in connection with interstate commerce or the transportation of passengers or property between or among the States; and from injuring or destroying any part of the tracks, roadbed, or road, or permanent structures of said railroads; and from injuring, destroying, or in any way interfering with any of the signals or switches of any of said railroads; and from displacing or extinguishing any of the signals of any of said railroads, and from spiking, locking, or in any manner fastening any of the switches of any of said railroads, and from uncoupling or in any way hampering or obstructing the control by any of said railroads of any of the cars, engines, or parts of trains of any of said railroads engaged in interstate commerce or in the transportation of passengers or freight between or among the States, or engaged in carrying any of the mails of the United States; and from compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, persuasion, force, or violence, any of the employees of any of said railroads to refuse or fail to perform any of their duties as employees of any of said railroads in connection with the interstate business or commerce of such railroads or the carriage of the United States mail by such railroads, or the transportation of passengers or property between or among the States; threats, intimidation, force, or violence of any of the employees of any of said railroads who are employed by such railroads and engaged in its service in the conduct of interstate business or in the operation of any of its trains carrying the mail of the United States, or doing interstate business, or the transportation of passengers and freight between and among the States, to leave the service of such railroads; and from preventing any person whatever by threats, intimidation, force, or violence from entering the service of any of said railroads and doing the work thereof, in the carrying of the mails of the United States, or the transportation of passengers and freight between or among the States; and from doing any act whatever in furtherance of any conspiracy or combination to restrain either of said railroad companies or receivers in the free and unhindered control and handling of interstate commerce over the lines of said railroads, and of transportation of persons and freight between and among the States; and from ordering, directing, aiding, assisting, or abetting in any manner whatever any person or persons to commit any or either of the acts aforesaid.

This injunction was granted. Of course, this does not go to the length of saying that two men may not meet on the street and talk about a strike or that two strikers may not come together in a room somewhere and talk about it. It does not go to the length of saying that they shall not talk over the telephone, but it does go to the length of restraining any two persons engaged in that strike from discussing it with the view of aiding or abetting that strike or of adding to the force of the strike or of furthering a conspiracy to continue the strike. I have said that I would not discuss this case, and I do not intend to. I want to go on, however, to read what the court says.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, was not that opinion delivered prior to the passage of the Clayton law?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; however, the principle involved is precisely the same.

On page 579 the court says:

> Among the powers expressly given to the National Government are the control of interstate commerce and the creation and management of a post-office system for the Nation—

And so forth.

Then it recites the various acts which Congress has passed for the control of interstate commerce. Then the court proceeds, and I commend this language to my good friend from Arkansas:

> As, under the Constitution, power over interstate commerce and the transportation of the mails is vested in the National Government and Congress by virtue of such grant has assumed actual and direct control, it follows that the National Government may prevent any unlawful and forcible interference therewith. But how shall this be accomplished?

This is the direct question. The Senator from Arkansas has not given us the benefit of his advice as to how the strike should be stopped. He said it should be settled, but he has not said how it should be settled.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Congress having refused to require obedience to decisions in disputes likely to result in strike, and having left the parties the privilege of effecting a settlement, the only way the strike can be settled lawfully is by express or implied agreement of the parties to the strike. Let the Senator understand that as my position.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But the Senator took the position a while ago that he did not object to the issuance of this injunction.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, Mr. President, I object to the issuance of this injunction because it violates the laws of the United States and seeks to infringe the constitutional rights of citizens of the United States. I say you can not under the law settle a strike by an injunction. If the Senator wants to make that an issue, in addition to the one I raised, I assert that you have no authority of law to issue an injunction to settle a strike, although you have apparently done that in this case.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understood the Senator to say in the beginning that he did not question the right of the court to issue an injunction, when I asked him a number of times whether or not he took exception to the fact that the court had issued an injunction at all or criticized the length to which it had gone in the injunction.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not then and do not now intend to enter into a discussion of the extent of the lawful powers of courts in the issuance of injunctions. That is a very complicated legal question. But I do make this contention, that the courts have no right to issue injunctions to settle strikes. Whatever they may have done in a case, whatever they may do in this case, there is no authority, express or implied, for the Government to settle a strike by an injunction. I hope I have made myself clear.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; the Senator has not made himself clear to me at all. It is perhaps due to my lack of understanding.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know whether my failure to do so is due to my own inability of expression or the inability of the Senator to comprehend the language which I have used. I leave it to those who have heard the debate. I say that the injunction in this case is an abuse of the authority of the Federal courts, because it violates the laws of Congress and because it infringes, or seeks to infringe, upon the constitutional rights of citizens. I go further now and say that it is an attempt, apparently, to settle a strike by an injunction, and that the laws of the United States do not, expressly or impliedly, give the Attorney General or the courts that power.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the Senator the same old question, and I do it with all due respect to the Senator. I want to find out whether or not, first, he criticizes the Attorney General——

Mr. ROBINSON. The Government——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Just a moment; let me ask my question. Does the Senator criticize the Attorney General for having asked for an injunction at all?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does the Senator criticize the court for having issued any injunction, or does the Senator deny the power——

Mr. ROBINSON. First——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Wait a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator wants to ask 40 questions, and then insist upon my answering "yes" or "no." If the Senator asks me a question, he must permit me to answer it after he has asked it.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But I have not asked it.

Mr. ROBINSON. And the Senator can not confine me to categorical answers. The Senator can not express half a dozen questions at once and then say, "Oh, the Senator from Arkansas has not cleared my mind on this subject."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator has answered one question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; what is the Senator's next question?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I ask the second question. Does the Senator deny that the court had any authority at all to issue any injunction in this case?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Then——

Mr. ROBINSON. Wait a moment. The statutes of the United States expressly give the courts power to issue injunctions.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Precisely.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I do not know whether facts exist in this case which would warrant a court in issuing an injunction to prevent interference with the mails, and so forth, or not; but I do know that in issuing this injunction the court has told American citizens that they can not do things which the law of the United States and which the Constitution guarantee to them they shall have the right to do, and for procuring that unlawful process I criticize the Attorney General, I criticize the court, and I criticize anybody who approves it.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understand now, in the first place, that the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not changed my position in the least.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I imagine that is true; but my trouble has been to find out what the Senator's position is.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Let me see if I understand the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator may proceed in his own way to discuss this subject. I have submitted to a process of heckling which has disclosed the unreadiness of the Senator to use his great powers to comprehend the language I have used.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I understand the Senator to say, first, that he does not criticize the Attorney General for having asked injunctive relief in this case.

Mr. ROBINSON. Not if the Attorney General had in his possession facts which justified him in taking action.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Of course, that must be assumed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Which in his opinion justified him in taking action.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly. Secondly, the Senator does not criticize the court for having issued an injuction, and thinks that, so far as interfering with the mail or interfering with interstate commerce is concerned, the court would have jurisdiction to issue an injunction.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not expressed an opinion on that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Has the court such jurisdiction?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is misquoting me. I have said I do not know what the facts are. I am perfectly willing for an officer of the United States to take any action which, under his conscience and the oath he has taken to support the laws and the Constitution, he is prompted to take, and he shall be the judge of that. The point I make is that in this case a course has been taken which can not be justified from the standpoint of a lawyer or a citizen who believes in upholding the Constitution.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Now, the Senator has referred to the newspapers quite frequently. The newspapers every day give accounts of interference with trains, of interference with the mails, of interference with interstate transportation, of destruction of bridges, of destruction of culverts, of the murder of people, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator yield to me a moment while I ask the Chair what happens at 1 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock has not quite arrived.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not making the suggestion to interrupt or stop the debate, because I know that is not within my power even if it were my inclination to do so, but I want to keep the record straight, and so I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Iowa that the Chair waited for the hour of 1 o'clock to arrive before laying before the Senate the unfinished business. That hour having but just arrived, that action is now taken and the unfinished business will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission, for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and I ask unanimous consent further that House bill 12472 be laid before the Senate for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CUMMINS. I also ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12472.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate the following bill.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, I suppose the discussion of the injunction can proceed in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. The Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Continuing the reading of the decision—and I read it because I think it is so peculiarly in point and sets forth the very things that the present injunction sets forth, with the exception of two or three matters to which I referred a moment ago—the court then said:

> Under the power vested in Congress to establish post offices and post roads Congress has, by a mass of legislation, established the great post-office system of the country, with all its detail of organization, its machinery for the transaction of business, defining what shall be carried and what not, and the prices of carriage, and also prescribing penalties for all offenses against it.
> Obviously these powers given to the National Government over interstate commerce and in respect to the transportation of the mails were not dormant and unused. Congress had taken hold of these two matters, and by various and specific acts had assumed and exercised the powers given to it, and was in the full discharge of its duty to regulate interstate commerce and carry the mails. The validity of such exercise and the exclusiveness of its control had been again and again presented to this court for consideration. It is curious to note the fact that in a large proportion of the cases in respect to interstate commerce brought to this court the question presented was of the validity of State legislation in its bearings upon interstate commerce, and the uniform course of decision has been to declare that it is not within the competency of a State to legislate in such a manner as to obstruct interstate commerce. If a State with its recognized powers of sovereignty is impotent to obstruct interstate commerce, can it be that any mere voluntary association of individuals within the limits of that State has a power which the State itself does not possess?
> As under the Constitution power over interstate commerce and the transportation of the mails is vested in the National Government, and Congress by virtue of such grant has assumed actual and direct control, it follows that the National Government may prevent any unlawful and forcible interference therewith. But how shall this be accomplished? Doubtless it is within the competency of Congress to prescribe by legislation that any interference with these matters shall be offenses against the United States and prosecuted and punished by indictment in the proper courts.

There is the particular principle laid down, and that, I claim, is all that has been done by this injunction.

> But is that the only remedy?

I call the attention of my friend from Arkansas to this clause:

> Have the vast interests of the Nation in interstate commerce, and in the transportation of the mails, no other protection than lies in the possible punishment of those who interfere with it? To ask the question is to answer it. By article 3, section 2, clause 3, of the Federal Constitution it is provided: "The trial of all crimes except in cases of impeachment shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crime shall have been committed." If all the inhabitants of a State, or even a great body of them, should combine to obstruct interstate commerce or the transportation of the mails, prosecutions for such offenses had in such a community would be doomed in advance to failure. And if the certainty of such failure was known, and the National Government had no other way to enforce the freedom of interstate commerce and the transportation of the mails than by prosecution and punishment for interference therewith, the whole interests of the Nation in these respects would be at the absolute mercy of a portion of the inhabitants of that single State.
> But there is no such impotency in the National Government. The entire strength of the Nation may be used to enforce in any part of the land the full and free exercise of all national powers and the security of all rights intrusted by the Constitution to its care. The strong arm of the National Government may be put forth to brush away all obstructions to the freedom of interstate commerce or the transportation of the mails. If the emergency arises the Army of the Nation, and all its militia, are at the service of the Nation to compel obedience to its laws.
>
> But passing to the second question, is there no other alternative than the use of force on the part of the executive authorities whenever obstructions arise to the freedom of interstate commerce or the transportation of the mails? Is the Army the only instrument by which rights of the public can be enforced and the peace of the Nation preserved? Grant that any public nuisance may be forcibly abated, either at the instance of the authorities or by any individual suffering private damage therefrom, the existence of this right of forcible abatement is not inconsistent with nor does it destroy the right of appeal in an orderly way to the courts for a judicial determination and an exercise of their powers by writ of injunction and otherwise to accomplish the same result. In Stamford v. Stamford Horse Railroad Co. (56 Conn., 381) an injunction was asked by the borough to restrain the company from laying down its track in a street of the borough. The right of the borough to forcibly remove the track was insisted upon as a ground for questioning the jurisdiction of a court of equity, but the court sustained the injunction, adding: "And none the less so because of its right to remove the track by force. As a rule injunctions are denied to those who have adequate remedy at law. Where the choice is between the ordinary and the extraordinary processes of law, and the former are sufficient, the rule will not permit the use of the latter. In some cases of nuisance and in some cases of trespass the law permits an individual to abate the one and prevent the other by force, because such permission is necessary to the complete protection of property and person. When the choice is between redress or prevention of injury by force and by peaceful process the law is well pleased if the individual will consent to waive his right to the use of force and await its action. Therefore, as between force and the extraordinary writ of injunction, the rule will permit the latter."
> So in the case before us the right to use force does not exclude the right of appeal to the courts for a judicial determination and for the exercise of all their powers of prevention. Indeed, it is more to the praise than to the blame of the Government that instead of determining for itself questions of right and wrong on the part of these petitioners and their associates and enforcing that determination by the club of the policeman and the bayonet of the soldier it submitted all those questions to the peaceful determination of judicial tribunals and invoked their consideration and judgment as to the measure of its rights and powers and the correlative obligations of those against whom it made complaint. And it is equally to the credit of the latter that the judgment of those tribunals was by the great body of them respected and the troubles which threatened so much disaster terminated.

Neither can it be doubted that the Government has such an interest in the subject matter as enables it to appear as party plaintiff in this suit. It is said that equity only interferes for the protection of property and that the Government has no property interest. A sufficient reply is that the United States have a property in the mails, the protection of which was one of the purposes of this bill. Searight v. Stokes (3 How. 151, 169), arose upon a compact between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania in respect to the Cumberland Road, which provided, among other things, "that no toll shall be received or collected for the passage of any wagon or carriage laden with the property of the United States," the question being whether a carriage employed in transporting the mails of the United States was one "laden with the property of the United States," and it was held that it was; the court, by Chief Justice Taney, saying: "The United States have unquestionably a property in the mails. They are not mere common carriers, but a government, performing a high official duty in holding and guarding its own property as well as that of its citizens committed to its care; for a very large portion of the letters and packages conveyed on this road, especially during the session of Congress, consists of communications to or from the officers of the executive departments or members of the legislature on public service or in relation to matters of public concern. * * * We think that a carriage, whenever it is carrying the mail, is laden with the property of the United States within the true meaning of the compact." (In re Debs, 158 U. S. Repts. 580–584.)

Mr. President, based upon this decision, there is ample grounds for the issuance of this injunction, and I do not believe that any thoughtful lawyer will deny its right so to do.

First, Mr. President, as I have said, I deplore—remembering always the right of the Senator from Arkansas—any discussion of the proposition on the floor of the Senate at this time, because it is a matter in the court and is to be settled one way or another next week. The court may modify its decree. I do not know. It may not modify its decree. That I can not say. But until a decree has finally and formally been issued, I do not believe it is the subject of legitimate discussion on the floor of either of the Houses of Congress, with all deference to my friend from Arkansas, the purity of whose intentions I always recognize.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suppose the Senator concedes to me the right to discuss it if he assumes the right to do so himself?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Precisely; although I disclaim any intention of discussing it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the Senator if he means to imply that he is not throwing much light on the question.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am not discussing it except as I am reading particular sections of the Clayton Act to which the Senator referred, and with his construction of which I am totally at variance, and in the next place to read from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which I believe to be on all fours with the case.

What I want to say very briefly is this: The Senator has said that the President of the United States changed front on the proposition. That I deny. The President of the United States was under no obligation as the Executive to interfere in any way with these two strikes, but knowing the situation and realizing the impending disaster to the country if the strike proceeded, he, in my judgment, went further than he need to have gone in order to bring about reconciliation between the contending factions. When conference after conference had been held, he having both sides at the White House several times, conference after conference by the executives, conference after conference by the labor people, conference after conference in which the five brotherhoods have acted as mediators—after all those conferences, when negotiation had signally failed to bring peace to the industrial situation of the country, then and then only did the President of the United States instruct the Attorney General to bring the injunctive proceedings.

What else was to be done? The mails were being interfered with. Interstate commerce was being interfered with. The free transportation of freight and passengers and the mails was being interfered with. Is the Government absolutely helpless in a situation of this kind? Have the 110,000,000 people other than the strikers no rights that the strikers themselves are bound to respect?

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I believe that it is the duty of the General Government to put behind the men who are seeking to give us transportation, both employer and employee, the full power of the Government to see that transportation moves unhindered and that the rights of the general people are not interfered with in that respect. So far as I am concerned, I hope that all the power of the General Government will be arrayed against the men, either employers or employees, who seek to interfere with the transportation of the mails and of the freight and of passengers over the lines of the railroad systems of the United States. I do not believe that the President could have done less, and I call attention again to the fact that he did not even go to that length until he had exhausted all possible sources of conciliation and until all the avenues of negotiation were blocked, and with that I am content to leave it.

I think that anyone who will sit down and read very seriously the case which I have cited, even though the decision was rendered before the passage of the Clayton Act, when taken in connection with sections 15 and 20 of the Clayton Act, expressly empowering the courts of the United States to act in certain instances, will be fully satisfied that the Attorney General was clearly within his rights in asking for the injunction and that the court was clearly within the limits of its power and jurisdiction and authority when it granted the temporary restraining order of which the Senator complains.

STREET RAILWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, on the 1st day of September the Senate passed the bill (S. 985) to amend the provisions of an act relating to certain railway corporations owning or operating street railways in the District of Columbia, approved June 5, 1900. On the 2d of September I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed.

The Committee on the District of Columbia have reported another bill later than that bill, and it is now on the calendar, being Order of Business 563, Senate bill 3296, to authorize the merger of certain street railway corporations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. In that bill there is a tax provision upon the operating income of the companies. That in my judgment is a very important provision, and I am very strongly in favor of it, and because it was not in the bill which was passed by the Senate was one reason why I entered a motion to reconsider. I am also opposed to the merger of the railway company and the power company.

I have conferred with members of the District Committee of the House of Representatives. They feel that possibly, with the bill coming over from the Senate, they may not be able to bring something out of that committee which will work out the situation in a satisfactory way. They have assured me that if Senate bill 985 comes to them it will not be reported by their committee unless the tax provision amendment is contained in the bill as reported from their committee. With that assurance and in the hope that something will be worked out satisfactorily I desire to withdraw my motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 985 was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington having withdrawn his motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 985 was passed, the record will show the bill as having been passed.

LABOR DAY ADDRESS OF HON. A. F. LEVER.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, in the Columbia State, a newspaper published in my State, there appeared a synopsis of a most excellent address delivered by Mr. A. F. Lever, who was recently a Member of Congress, on the question of strikes. I ask to have the synopsis printed in the RECORD in 8-point type. It contains food for thought for the people of the United States.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

[From the State, Columbia, S. C., Tuesday morning, September 5, 1922.]

TALKS PLAINLY TO UNION MEN—LEVER'S LABOR DAY SPEECH IS EXPLICIT—RIGHTS OF PUBLIC—REMINDS HEARERS THAT PUBLIC OPINION CONTROLS—CAROLINA COMMUNITY OF PRODUCERS.

Not in many months has a more courageous address been made in South Carolina than that delivered yesterday at Victory Park during a Labor Day celebration by A. F. Lever, former Congressman from South Carolina. Other features of the celebration are reported elsewhere in the State to-day.

Probably 90 per cent of the male portion of the audience addressed by Mr. Lever was made up of members of labor unions and a large part of the balance of the audience was composed of sympathizers. Many of the men in the crowd were on strike, yet Mr. Lever gave what might be termed "the average non-union individual's view of the strike." Be it said to the credit of the hundreds of labor-union men who heard Mr. Lever that they accorded him a respectful hearing and gave him that attention due an invited guest.

His address elicited no enthusiastic applause, but it was a thoughtful crowd which dispersed after Mr. Lever had spoken. Mr. Lever outlined clearly labor issues as he saw them and spoke with that compelling earnestness which in former years made him a power on the stump.

"I quit politics some years ago," he said in the outset of his address, after which he spoke briefly of the honors which the people of his district had conferred upon him.

"We are living in extremely troublesome times," he said. "We are getting the results of the upheaval which a few months ago nearly overthrew civilization.

"In certain sections of Europe civilization is standing on the brink of a vast chasm which threatens it with destruction," and then he spoke of conditions in Russia.

"Civilization," he said with appealing earnestness, "can not live without government. Without government, the strong will overrun the weak, and the weak will be at the mercy of the strong and the criminal." "Government," he continued, "comes from God."

THE RIGHT TO WORK.

"There is a great deal of strange thinking and of strange acting in this country to-day.

"I do not fear for the future of America. The elements which founded it came to America that they might have freedom to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences.

"If there is any potential danger ahead of us, it lies in the fact that we have come to thinking in terms of the group rather than in terms of the individual.

"There are some things that are fundamental. Among them is the right of the individual to work or not to work. That right can not be taken from him nor can he bargain it away—it is an inalienable right.

"Now, the corollary to that right, the right of the individual to work, carries with it the right of the individual to quit work when he gets ready to do so.

"Then the right to work carries with it the right of the other fellow to work if he wants to.

"Union labor has the right to strike for more wages and for better working conditions.

"But neither I, as an individual, nor you, as a group, have the right to say that because I don't want to work under such and such conditions, I refuse the right of some other fellow to work under those conditions." Here there were some calls of "Good night," but Mr. Lever, never shifting his eyes, continued his address and spoke of collective bargaining.

OUTSIDE PUBLIC INTERESTED.

"The outside public has an intimate concern with what you do," he said, in continuing his address to the union men.

"To the railroad men of the State and Nation is given the task of moving to market the products of the farms of America.

"Eighty per cent of the people of South Carolina are engaged in production. They produce two of the necessities of life.

"Deny the people clothing or food or fuel and civilization freezes—starves—collapses. Our people, 80 per cent of them, produce either food or clothing.

"If the farmers should refuse to produce for you, you would starve in four months. The great cities of the land are within about three weeks of starvation—that is, they have food supplies to last for that length of time without replenishment.

"No cause can live unless it appeal to the great mass of the people. If public sentiment is not with you, you fail.

"I say to you frankly, the public feels that it is time that labor and capital should come to some agreement and get to work.

"When the farmer sees his crops rotting in the field because of lack of transportation, he concludes that some element of our population is not living up to its job. I want to see organized labor so conduct itself as to have the support of the public, as it once had.

"The salvation of agriculture in South Carolina is the salvation of every other group.

"Labor has got to win its fight within the bounds of the law. The public will not support any group which refuses to conform its acting and its thinking to the law of the land."

ALONG REGIONAL LINES.

"I wonder," Lever said, in drawing his address to a conclusion, "if labor will not be organized some day along regional lines, somewhat as are the land banks.

"Conditions vary in our great country. For example, we might say that a workman in San Francisco could get comfort and satisfaction from a wage scale 25 per cent lower than the same comfort and satisfaction could be procured for in South Carolina. If labor in South Carolina is getting along satisfactorily, you should not, at the mandate of some half dozen men, be compelled to walk out. With a regional arrangement, you would have some say in regard to the matter."

When Mr. Lever concluded, there was some rather perfunctory applause. Some of the audience spoke with him and many expressed their pleasure at seeing him back in South Carolina.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the pending question be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated by the Secretary.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. The amendment to the amendment is to add a new section as follows, changing the numbers of the succeeding sections:

SEC. 5. Nothing herein shall be construed as affecting valid existing contracts in effect prior to the date of the passage of this act, nor shall car service be denied to any person or corporation because of any prices named in any such preexisting contract.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am very much opposed to the amendment to the amendment.

SALT RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona, which will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on House bill 10248. Is there objection?

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to ask whether the immediate consideration of the conference report has been asked for?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will it involve debate?

Mr. McNARY. It will involve no debate whatsoever.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall not object to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4 and from its amendment to the title of the bill.

CHAS. L. McNARY,
W. L. JONES,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CONDITION OF THE COTTON CROP AND ABANDONED ACREAGE (S. DOC. NO. 249).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 333, the September 1 cotton report of the Department of Agriculture, including estimate of the acreage of cotton abandoned since June 25 up to August 25, 1922, and the acreage remaining in cultivation on the last-named date, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has offered an amendment to the amendment which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has offered as a substitute for the bill. The amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa reads:

SEC. 5. Nothing herein shall be construed as affecting valid existing contracts in effect prior to the date of the passage of this act, nor shall car service be denied to any person or corporation because of any prices named in any such preexisting contract.

There was some discussion last evening about modifying the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia. It was suggested that we should strike out the words "the date of the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "prior to September 1, 1922," so that it would read:

Nothing herein shall be construed as affecting valid existing contracts in effect prior to September 1, 1922—

And so forth. I do not know whether the suggested modification was agreed to by the Senator from West Virginia. It seems to me that such a modification is rather important, because it will have the effect of relieving the objection urged by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and others, I think, that if the amendment was agreed to in its present shape opportunity would be afforded for speculating; that would undertake to make contracts now for the purpose of speculating in coal, but if such limitation was put in the amendment and the operation of the bill was confined to contracts in existence prior to September 1, there would not be that opportunity for speculating which was mentioned. I, myself, think it is quite important, even if the proposed amendment is considered favorable at all, that it should specify that it refers to contracts in effect prior to September 1. Otherwise, I think there would be very valid objection to the amendment. With that change in it, however, much more argument, I think, could be offered in support of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can only express my own view with regard to the matter, and I did so fully last night. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] in the particular form in which it is now offered would destroy the bill and render it impotent and ineffective. Anyone who believes that the remedy which we seek here ought not to be given to the people of this country should vote for the amendment, and those who wish some real effective legislation ought to vote against it. That is all I have to say with regard to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to modify my amendment to the pending amendment by inserting in lieu of the words "in effect prior to the date of the passage of this act" the words "in effect prior to September 1, 1922."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment, as modified, which the Senator from West Virginia proposes to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, unless we shall adopt an amendment of the kind now proposed by the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa we are going to disorganize the business of the United States. The manufacturers make contracts for their raw materials, and then they sell their manufactured products ahead perhaps three months, six months, or even longer. If this bill shall be passed without protecting contracts for coal which are already in existence prices will be disarranged and the manufacturing interests will not know where they stand. Perhaps those industries sell goods in China or Japan or South America, all over the world. It is absolutely wrong legally and it is wrong morally for Congress to enact legislation which will encourage people to break their contracts, and, in fact, this proposed legislation, if enacted, would be an invitation to people to break their contracts.

As I stated on yesterday, I am opposed to profiteering and I hope something may be done to check it, but the contracts which I am trying to protect are contracts which were entered into perhaps six months ago. There ought to be some date fixed, say the 1st of September or the 1st of August or some other date, so that the contracts entered into prior to that time may be carried out. This proposed legislation will very nearly result in ruination to the business of the country. I feel that the pending bill is the most radical measure which could possibly be enacted into law.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. What particular price is involved in the contracts which the Senator from South Carolina has in mind?

Mr. DIAL. I have in mind the particular contracts which call for the delivery of coal at $1.90 a ton.

Mr. LENROOT. How does the Senator think this amendment would affect those contracts?

Mr. DIAL. It would affect them just as it is affecting them now. They will not be able to get cars enough in which to deliver the contract coal.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator, then, thinks this amendment would compel the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish those cars?

Mr. DIAL. It would not compel them to furnish the cars, perhaps, though it ought to compel them to furnish them; but this proposed legislation will excuse them for not furnishing them. I do not wish to give those who have entered into the contracts any more encouragement to fail to carry out their contracts than they have at present. In fact, I think the Government ought not to interfere at all, but should let them go on and carry out their contracts.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator thinks, then, that a cotton mill which has a contract should have coal in preference to those who need it in order to keep from freezing, does he?

Mr. DIAL. Not in preference to those who need it in order to keep them from freezing; but if the cotton-mill employees are turned out of work they will perish by starvation, and I reckon it would be about as painful to perish in that way as it would be to freeze to death.

Mr. LENROOT. It is the Senator's idea, then, that a cotton mill should have a preference over the domestic users who need coal to keep them from freezing if the cotton mills have a contract?

Mr. DIAL. Not altogether. I think the supply ought to be spread out so as to keep all activities going and prevent the people from freezing as well as perishing in other ways; but I do not think it is constitutional, in the first place, and I know it is not morally right, in the second place, for Congress to invite people to violate their contracts. It is proposed to abrogate contracts by legislative enactment, and that will set a bad precedent in this country. I certainly hope, Mr. President, not that any profiteering contracts but that perfectly legitimate, honest, and fair contracts will be protected; in fact, I do not see that we could possibly grant any less to the people of this country. We have got plenty of time; winter is not on us, and if the production of coal at the mines is rushed and the delivery expedited I think everybody can be taken care of, and I believe they will be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the language of the Lever Act, in which during the war it was attempted to regulate prices. That act was approved August 10, 1917, just a few months after we had become involved in the war. On page 14 of that act there is a provision which reads:

The maximum prices so fixed and published shall not be construed as invalidating any contract in which prices are fixed, made in good faith, prior to the establishment and publication of maximum prices by the commission.

The two preceding paragraphs of the act related to the fixing of prices and provided how they should be fixed by the commission and what factors should be taken into account. I will read them:

In fixing maximum prices for producers the commission shall allow the cost of production, including the expense of operation, maintenance, depreciation, and depletion, and shall add thereto a just and reasonable profit.

In fixing such prices for dealers the commission shall allow the cost to the dealer and shall add thereto a just and reasonable sum for his profit in the transaction.

Then follows the paragraph which I first read.

At that time we were in the midst of a war and we were using every energy of the Government to marshal the forces of the country for war and enacting legislation which was considered at that time, and which many still consider to be extremely drastic in order that the war might be prosecuted successfully, yet it was thought wise and proper to insert in the Lever Act a provision which made it perfectly clear that it "should not be construed as invalidating any contract in which prices are fixed, made in good faith, prior to the establishment and publication of maximum prices by the commission." It seems to me, Mr. President, we can well adopt a similar precaution at this time, in order that the sanctity of private contracts may not be unnecessarily violated.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Lever Act provided for a maximum price at which coal could be sold, and a penalty was imposed if that price were exceeded. There is nothing in the pending bill which prevents any man from making any contract at any price he may choose; it merely goes to the question of transportation and delivery.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that it has been stated frequently on this floor with reference to the purposes of the pending bill that it does go directly to the fixing of the prices. If it does not do that, then the bill is without purpose at all. That is certainly the object of the bill, because it has been stated by lawyers in the Senate—and the statement has been uncontradicted practically—that all the powers with reference to establishing priorities in car service now exist by virtue of the Cummins-Esch Act, passed in 1920; but the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce said that he was in some doubt, as I understood him—and I do not want to misrepresent him—as to whether the commission in discriminating with reference to car service could take into account the prices at which the coal was to be sold. In section 2 of the pending bill it is stated specifically that it is—to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

Mr. President, some one must fix a maximum price. Otherwise, how will there be any determination as to whether a price is unjustly or unreasonably high? Some officer of the commission, or the Interstate Commerce Commission itself, must fix a maximum price or maximum prices. So it is perfectly plain that this bill does go directly to the fixing of prices, and a penalty attaches to it, in that it is attempted to give the commission power to withhold cars from any such operator who may, in the judgment of the commission, charge unjust or unreasonable prices; and that, as before stated, is largely a matter of opinion.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. If a man sells coal at a greater price than that found to be reasonable, has he violated this law in any way?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If he sells coal at a price which the Interstate Commerce Commission or its agents regard as unreasonable or unjust, he certainly has incurred the penalty of this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. My question was, Has he violated the law?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He has not violated any law, but he has incurred a penalty which this bill imposes, namely, withholding car service from him.

Mr. LENROOT. But under the Lever law, if he sold at a price in excess of the maximum, he would have violated a law. Does not the Senator see the distinction?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The authors of this bill did not dare go to the extent of framing a bill which provided for the fixing of maximum prices. They are attempting, however, to do that very thing by indirection; and they perfectly well know that to carry out the purposes which they state this bill is to include, some one must fix maximum prices of coal. Otherwise, how would the agents of the commission exercise the power which this bill proposes to give to them, that of withholding car service? While no price fixing is specifically provided for in the bill, yet it is perfectly apparent what the purpose of this thing is; and we ought to look the matter squarely in the face and know what we are doing, rather than to be misled by statements about the public interest, and other general statements of that kind.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose in offering this amendment to protect any profiteer in coal, either producer or wholesaler. I have offered an amendment to my amendment in order to make it perfectly clear that any valid existing contract in effect prior to September 1 shall not be interfered with, and that means that the price at which that coal shall be sold shall not be used as an excuse for withholding cars in order that the coal may be delivered. It does not attempt to set aside the law which at present exists, under the operation of which proper priorities may be given to essential industries. Many of those who have these valid, binding private contracts are essential industries. I believe that by far the larger number of them have been made by essential industries.

It appears to me to be quite apparent that the attempt is being made to protect rather those who lost their opportunity last spring to make contracts for their coal at exceedingly low prices. I stated yesterday evening that a certain percentage of coal operators speculated in their own coal in this way: If in their judgment coal was likely to rise in price during the year, they refused to contract for their coal, or for all of their coal. They left all or a good part of it subject to the spot market. In other words, they took the market price every day throughout the year, whereas the usual custom is to contract for all or nearly all of the coal produced at a given mine or by a given company. On the other hand, a great many purchasers of coal speculate in coal. If they believe that the price of coal is going down, when the contract period comes around—the 1st of April, as it usually is—every year, they refuse to renew their contracts or make new contracts for coal. They prefer to take their chances on the spot coal market.

Every large consumer of coal that is accustomed to purchase its coal requirements for the year had an opportunity, before the 1st of April of this year or subsequent to that date, to purchase all the coal it could possibly need during the current year at very low prices. A great many of them did so. Some of them did not do so; and no doubt in the last month or two, realizing that they made a wrong guess in reference to the coal market or the probabilities of it during the winter months, they have made contracts at larger prices than were current during the early part of the coal year; and I believe that the effort is being made more to protect those people than it is really to serve the public interest by this legislation.

We all realize that there is a crisis in respect to the production of fuel, or more especially with reference to the distribution of fuel; for while there is a great shortage of coal, confessedly by all who know anything about the subject the greater part of that shortage with respect to bituminous coal—and I am not speaking about anthracite coal—is occasioned by the lack of transportation facilities; and until we go to the question of transportation, and solve that difficulty, we are not going to solve the problem that is before Congress and before the country to solve.

Mr. President, I believe that the pending amendment is very essential and that it should be inserted in this bill as a means of letting those know who have been wise enough to enter into contracts at prices entirely reasonable to them that they will not have cars denied them upon the pretext that the prices for which they have consented to purchase this coal are unreasonable in the judgment of some officer or clerk up here in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It was stated yesterday that no clerk would exercise these functions. All of us who were in this body during the recent war had relations with the fuel administration here. I believe that Mr. Garfield, who was at the head of the fuel administration, is one of the very ablest and fairest men that I came in contact with during the war period at Washington. I know that he wanted at all times to do what was right, and as nearly as he could discover what the right was he did it. We know, however, as will be the case under the operation of this bill, that it is going to entail a vast amount of routine work. The man at the top can not possibly attend to the many details that it will be necessary for him to master and pass upon in the discharge of the duties that are devolved upon him by reason of this bill. It becomes the custom, as we all know, in all of these departments to pass along these duties, and finally we find some $1,500 or $1,800 clerk down in the department who is actually doing the work, and getting very little for it. If it is taken up higher, his act is O. K'd all the way up to his superior officers, or it is supposed to receive the sanction of his superior officers unless some question is raised about it. I knew personally men who had been mine clerks out in West Virginia who had very important duties devolving upon them, and some of them became so important that United States Senators could hardly get in to see them during the morning period before we came to the Senate. A good many of the duties imposed by this bill upon this commission will eventually be discharged by some minor official, and upon his judgment as to what is a fair and reasonable price for this fuel the operation of this law will depend.

I think the pending amendment is entirely fair and just. It will not interfere with the orderly distribution of cars, taking into account the essential industries, but it will not give an excuse to those who administer the law to withhold cars because some minor official there conceives the idea that a person who has already contracted for the coal and has a valid existing binding contract has paid a little more than he thinks should be paid for that coal.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, just a word with regard to the amendment as modified.

It seems to me that in that condition the amendment would not by any means destroy or even impair the virtue of this measure. I can not agree with the chairman of the committee that the adoption of such an amendment would practically annihilate all the good that would come from the enactment of this bill into law.

It seems to me the effect is only this, that it will deprive coal dealers and sellers of the excuse which they can now allege, that they would carry out their contracts but for the fact that they can not get cars. I have no experience in the matter, and no constituents of mine are involved at all, but these facts have been brought to my attention by others, and it is entirely conceivable that an industry requiring coal should have made contracts in advance for their supply. They are almost obliged to do that in order to make their own calculations and to dispose of their own product in an orderly way. They must provide for the fuel with which to carry on their industry, and they must make contracts for it.

Let us take any important industry which needs coal and which has made a contract with a coal dealer or an operator, a person having a mine or coal, at so much a ton for the coal supply. Those contracts made before September 1 were therefore not made in contemplation of the passage of such a bill as this, not made for speculative purposes, but made in due course of business, and relied upon by those conducting the industry, and of course figured on by the men who sold the coal.

Suppose a contract is made, for instance, for $1.90 a ton f. o. b. The coal dealer may be able to get $3.90 a ton now for that same coal. He does not want to violate his contract heretofore made, but he can say to the person with whom he made the contract, "I am perfectly willing to supply the coal, but I can not get the cars. The trouble is that they will not let me have the cars to move the coal." Perhaps all the time he is getting cars to supply somebody else at $3.90 a ton, but he makes that excuse, and so far as the purchaser, the party with whom he has the contract, is concerned, that party is unable to disprove his statement that he can not get cars. For some reason or other he may not be making an effort to get those cars. On the other hand, he may present his case to the distributor, for instance, or the Interstate Commerce Commission under this bill, but not press it at all, and get no action upon it, and keep delaying and delaying before he gets an order for the cars to carry out his contract, and he can usually make it appear that he can not obtain cars and therefore can not perform his contract, and because it can get no order for the delivery of the coal that industry will be injured and suffer loss and damage which it can not recover.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator whether he thinks this amendment would permit the furnishing of cars where there was a contract for $1.90 a ton, where it would otherwise not permit it under existing law?

Mr. FLETCHER. This amendment would not permit it. It would not change the status of the parties at all, except it would preclude the denial of cars on the sole ground that the price specified in the contract might, but for the contract, be regarded as too high.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator thinks it would? The Senator from West Virginia says not.

Mr. FLETCHER. Without this amendment if the price is considered too high cars would be denied. There is the control, but the power is extended to preventing high prices. It is not to be invoked in preventing low prices.

Mr. LENROOT. It does not affect the low prices, does it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator gave an illustration of a contract at $1.90, where a man could get cars for coal to be sold at $3.90. Of course that could not be.

Mr. FLETCHER. It might be. Of course I mean without the knowledge of all the facts by the distributor or the commission.

Mr. LENROOT. If he could get cars to deliver coal contracted for at $3.90 a ton, he could get cars for $1.90 coal, could he not?

Mr. FLETCHER. The trouble is that the chap who has made the contract to deliver that coal at $1.90 does not want to deliver it. He does not want to carry out his contract. He can sell coal at $3.90, and he prefers, of course, to sell that coal and get the cars to haul it.

Mr. LENROOT. If he can get cars for $3.90 coal, what is there in this bill which would prevent him from getting cars for $1.90 coal?

Mr. FLETCHER. This amendment would simply deprive him of the excuse that he can not get cars.

Mr. LENROOT. How would it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Because if the application were made to the distributor or to the Interstate Commerce Commission under this bill, based on the prior contract, they would order the cars, provided all conditions of priority and classification of the demand were complied with, irrespective of the price. Every other condition being met the party would be entitled to the cars no matter what the price agreed on was.

Mr. LENROOT. But does the Senator say that without this amendment they would refuse to order the cars for hauling coal sold at a low price, but permit the operator to get cars to haul coal sold at a higher price?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not say they would. I am simply saying that the operator might manipulate and manage the matter so as to delay shipments and offer that excuse, that he could not get cars to carry out his contract. This amendment would deprive him of that excuse, because under this amendment the distributor would say, "So far as these contracts which have already been made prior to September 1 are concerned cars will be furnished to carry out the contracts if all conditions and requirements entitling the party to them are met, and will not be denied only because of the prices named."

The Senator from Wisconsin suggested a moment ago to the Senator from South Carolina that he might insist that his industry be supplied with coal, and people might suffer elsewhere in comfort and health for lack of fuel, because the amendment would require the furnishing of cars. The amendment does not provide that. The amendment states:

> Nor shall car service be denied to any person or corporation because of any prices named in any such preexisting contract.

That is the only limitation. There is no denial of the right of ordering priorities or determining priorities. The only restriction is that by reason of the prices fixed in these contracts made before September, the cars may not be denied. Outside of that, they can be denied.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator's theory is that an operator would deny coal under contract at a low price because he could furnish it to some one else at a higher price. That can not be, because if he could get cars for the high-priced coal, he could get cars for the low-priced coal.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree fully with the Senator; he can get them, other things being equal, but I am simply saying it is entirely conceivable that he will not do it, and will not attempt to do it. He will tell the person with whom he has the contract to supply that coal that the reason he does not supply it is because he can not get cars. This amendment will deprive him of that excuse.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. The other day a coal speculator or a coal dealer in Cincinnati made a contract for a large amount of coal at $6, $7, or $8 a ton—I do not remember the price—and is now offering it to the public while there is a shortage of coal cars. The Senator would compel the commission to give him cars to move that speculative coal in preference to moving coal for essential industries, would he?

Mr. FLETCHER. The only question which will not be considered by the distributor and by the Interstate Commerce Commission is the price. All other questions are still open.

Mr. KELLOGG. That man is not an operator; that man is not a manufacturer; he does not run a public utility. He bought the coal for speculation, and he contracted for it at $6, $7, or $8 a ton. The Senator would force the commission to give him cars to carry that coal in preference to noncontract coal at a reasonable price.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is exactly what you would do by this amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. The commission's power and right to determine whether or not that coal is to be used in an industry, the purpose for which it is bought, the object for which it is to be shipped, the intention for which it is to be used, and they would have the unimpaired right to say to a man, "We will not permit you to buy coal and store it for speculation and will not allow you to have cars to carry out that plan and purpose," precisely as if this amendment had not been adopted.

Mr. KELLOGG. This amendment prohibits that.

Mr. FLETCHER. On the contrary, the only thing this amendment prohibits is an inquiry into the question of price where preexisting contracts are involved. The language is perfectly plain, "Nor shall car service be denied to any person," not because they made a contract heretofore, dated prior to September 1, not because to do so would violate the contract, not because a contract between the parties was heretofore made, but "because of any prices named in any such preexisting contract." That is all. The distributor will have no right, if this amendment is adopted, to refuse cars because of the price fixed in the contract heretofore made, but as to all other questions the field is wide open for them to order priorities based upon the rules which they will prescribe. The only question they can not inquire into is the question of price. They have the absolute right, under this amendment, to inquire into whether the purchase is being made for speculative purposes, whether the coal is to be stored and kept out of use, or is needed for an industry or for heating the home, and all other questions it may be determined shall be considered. They still have that right, if this amendment is agreed to, and they could deny the cars for any of the reasons established, except they can not deny them on the ground of the price fixed in the contract when one exists.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Then it would be left in the discretion of the commission to close down a business if it saw proper. It would have authority to deny coal to any enterprise and close it down if, in its judgment, it thought best.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. DIAL. That was not the purpose for which I rose, however. I have a copy of a telegram, the name of the sender of which I do not care to give, sent to Mr. J. G. Roth, director of service, Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington. This is from the mine operator, the man who actually mines the coal. It reads:

"We are being swamped with complaints by contract customers in class 5 who say they can get all the coal they want from Southern Railway and land mines in Tennessee if they pay the price. Have checked this up and find that it is true. How is it that these mines can ship in class 5 at a price and we are not allowed to ship on contracts to class 5 business? Clinchfield Railroad positively will not let us ship coal to cotton mills, claiming violation of service order 23. Is this order still in effect? If so, when do you expect it will be changed?"

I list below the numbers of five cars which were shipped from Palmer, Tenn., on the N. C. & St. L. to a cotton mill in this territory.

He gives the number of cars, and states:

This coal was shipped on August 28. The price, I think, was $5.75 per net ton f. o. b. cars at the mines, or $6.

Then he gives the name to whom it was shipped. I do not care to give that name. He can get cars to ship at one price, but can not get them to ship on contract at the lower price.

Mr. FLETCHER. That simply illustrates what is being practiced now, and that kind of practice is what we are trying to reach and correct by this amendment.

Mr. DIAL. Exactly.

Mr. FLETCHER. They will give the excuse, no doubt, that they can not get cars, and therefore do not fill their contracts. But they can get cars to deliver higher priced coal to other people. This amendment would deprive them of that excuse. The distributor, the commission, would still determine whether that industry ought to be classified in a certain way or not. They will still determine where the coal ought to go and for what reasons. They will still have the right to lay down all the rules necessary, and issue priority orders for shipment just the same, but they will not have the right to say that where the owner of an industry has made a contract at a certain price for the delivery of coal heretofore solely by reason of that price they will not give him the cars. That is a matter they will not be able to control. But outside of the question of price they would have all the authority as to priority of shipments that they have under the law without the amendment. That is perfectly plain from the express terms of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I have been listening to the contentions about these contracts which existed prior to this legislation. I can not understand why there should be any objection to stipulating in the legislation that the terms of any contract which existed prior to the passage of this act should be left, and only put the contractor in the category of others as to what percentage and what amount he would get, without disturbing the contract.

For instance, if my colleague had contracted for 100 tons of coal at a certain price and in the judgment of the fuel administrator the public good would be served by denying him a percentage of it, let it be determined how much he is to get but do not disturb his contract or deny him a prorata share by virtue of the existing contract. I take it that is what the Senator's amendment provides, that if in the judgment of the fuel administrator those who have made previous contracts should not get the entire fulfillment of their contract, whatever they did get would be subject to the contract. I can not see any objection in the world to that provision in the bill, because if any business man has bought coal and the price is satisfactory as between himself and the seller, if an emergency arose where it would not be for the public welfare for him to receive the entire amount of the coal for which he had contracted, he should be allowed to get such of the coal he did get under the priority order and in the mobilization and distribution of the coal at the contract price upon which he had agreed.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. If a speculator made a contract for $7 a ton and said "I am going to sell that coal to the railroad and get whatever I can for it," will the Senator tell me why we should protect that speculator through this measure when otherwise the railroad would get the coal at a reasonable price?

Mr. SMITH. I understand that there may be a purchase of coal in view of the fear that there might be a shortage, but I do not think that the end to be accomplished justifies the means invoked. We are embarking upon a precedent that will come back to plague us. We are going to attempt to fix prices. I am in favor of the distribution of coal to obviate suffering. I would never oppose any bill which, in an emergency of this kind, looked toward the relief of human suffering. But we are all intelligent people, and the railroad people and those who buy coal are just as well aware of the situation as we are. I do not know that we have the right to engage in the enactment of ex post facto laws which involve the abrogation of contracts to relieve the situation. I think we are embarking upon rather dangerous ground. We can distribute the coal, and we can regret that human greed may have imposed certain financial suffering, but the financial suffering is nothing compared to the establishment of a precedent here that may ultimately come back to plague us.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I doubt very much if Congress has the right or authority to enact a law that violates a contract or permits the violation of contracts. The amendment simply recognizes the existence of contracts which have been made heretofore and in good faith, with the limitation that the bill carries as to all conditions throughout the country; that is to say, with reference to priority orders—the furnishing of cars, and that sort of thing—all obtaining as to these contracts. The only thing the amendment prohibits is that because of the price fixed in the contracts cars shall not be denied. That is all. The question of price is a matter between the coal dealer or operator and the industry or individual making the contract with him. That price has been agreed upon and settled. Both parties are satisfied with it. I do not see why we can not eliminate that feature from all consideration by the distributor and by the Interstate Commerce Commission in perfect good faith to everybody under those contracts. The thing finally accomplished by it, as I said, is that it deprives the coal people, who have made the contracts, of the excuse for not fulfilling their contracts or not performing them, the claim that they can not get cars. I think that is worth while doing, and for that reason I think the amendment is entirely proper and should be agreed to.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, my respect for those Senators who have spoken in behalf of the bill is so high and my belief in their wisdom and legal ability is so great that I would not venture to speak on the bill if my belief in its unconstitutionality and in its unwisdom did not amount to a positive conviction. I believe it is unconstitutional; I believe it is unwise; and I believe that if enacted into law it would be utterly impracticable and unenforceable. With all the brevity I can command I should like to explain why I so think.

Whenever a measure is proposed to Congress of course the query suggests itself, under what express power does Congress propose to enact the statute? That query has been made and has been answered by the proponents of the bill that it is under the interstate-commerce power. Under that power it is proposed to provide that the highways of the Nation shall be denied to such sellers of coal, either producers or dealers, as charge more or have in the past charged more than some appointive officer or appointive commission in Washington may decide to be a fair and reasonable price. It is claimed that this is a regulation of commerce; that is to say, that it is within the power of the Congress in substance to prohibit the transportation of a commodity like coal because, forsooth, back in its history some one who owned it has sold it for an undue price. I venture to assert, Mr. President, that never has the commerce clause been stretched to such an extent as that.

In the first child-labor case, decided in 1917, the Supreme Court reviewed those cases in which the regulation of commerce by Congress had amounted to a prohibition. It called attention first in the list to the Lottery case. A lottery ticket was a thing that was evil in itself, and it was upon that ground, because the subject of the commerce was evil, that the power of Congress to prohibit its passage in interstate commerce was sustained. The next case involved the pure food law. The power there was sustained because impure food and impure drugs were evil in themselves. Next came the white slave act, obviously of the same nature. Next the traffic in intoxicating liquors in interstate commerce was prohibited because they in themselves had been declared by Congress to be an evil.

In all those cases the power to regulate was construed to include the power to prohibit the passage of those evil things from one State to another. But in the child-labor case the Supreme Court very forcefully called attention to the fact that the product of child labor was not evil in itself, that the articles intrinsically did not bear evil. It was the evil of child labor in production, in the State of their origin, against which Congress was aiming. It was held in that case, and I think it would necessarily be held in a case involving the pending bill, that as the subject of the prohibition was not in itself unlawful, it was not within the regulatory power of Congress to prohibit its passage in interstate commerce. That is what that bill in substance would do. It would prohibit the use of facilities impartially so long as there was any shortage. It would be a denial of an ordinary right to a citizen transacting an ordinary business in a commodity not evil in itself.

It has been very often held that all of the express powers given Congress in the Constitution are subject to the prohibitions of the Bill of Rights. In the Monongahela Navigation case it was directly held that the interstate commerce power of Congress was expressly subject to those guaranties of the rights of the individual which are contained in the first 10 amendments. If that is so, then the exercise of the power to regulate commerce is still subject to the Bill of Rights, and particularly to the fifth amendment. Congress can not escape that by declaring an emergency, as it is proposed to do in the first section of the pending billl. It has never been held that either in an emergency or out of an emergency the guaranty of just compensation for property taken is suspended. On the other hand, it has been affirmatively held in the Milligan case and others that even the existence of such an emergency as a state of war does not suspend the provisions of the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

As the court said in the Milligan case, decided in 1866, speaking of the wisdom of our ancestors in adopting the Bill of Rights:

> Time has proven the discernment of our ancestors. * * * Those great and good men foresaw that troublous times would arise, when rulers and people would become restive under restraint, and seek by sharp and decisive measures to accomplish ends deemed just and proper; and that the principles of constitutional liberty would be in peril, unless established by irrepealable law. The history of the world had taught them that what was done in the past might be attempted in the future. The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances. No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government.

Yet, forsooth, Mr. President, because there has been a coal strike, which fortunately now has passed, because the greed of some men has led them to ask high prices for the commodity which they controlled during this period of stringency—because of that comparatively slight emergency in the history of this country, we are now asked to sanction an act which will take from all producers of coal a part of the market value of their property, without making a shadow of compensation for it; which will deprive them of their liberty of contract in the sale of their commodity at the market price; which will go back retrospectively and punish them by denying them railway facilities because of some contracts which they may have made in the past before this bill becomes a law. All of the guaranties of the Constitution are to be suspended, if you please, because we have for a moment a period of high prices in coal.

I refuse to be considered the advocate of the profiteer because I rise in my place now and claim that the calamities that will follow such an overturning of constitutional protection are far worse than any calamity that can happen because of the momentary stringency in coal. It is idle to say that this is not a price-fixing bill. Of course it is declared in the title of the House bill, and it is also declared in the title of the Senate substitute, which it is sought to put in place of the House bill, that it is to prevent the exaction of unreasonable high prices. I believe in all sincerity that it is utterly beyond the power of Congress in or out of an emergency, in war or in peace, to do any such thing as is proposed to be done.

The proponents of this bill seem to rely upon the decision of the Supreme Court in the rent law cases, where it was held, in substance, that if Congress commenced its enactment by a declaration that an emergency existed that, so to speak, stunned the Constitution during the emergency and allowed Congress to impair the obligation of contracts. It has never been held in any case that a declaration of an emergency would suspend the just compensation provision; it has never been held that it would suspend the guaranties of liberty of contract; but the theory of the proponents of the bill seems to be along the line of the rent law cases, that, having declared a coal emergency to exist, Congress may go on and ignore the Constitution. I submit that that is most seriously wrong; that the decision in the rent law cases can not be attacked more savagely than it was in the dissenting opinion that came down with that decision. Nothing I could say could be as severe as that dissenting opinion, in which then Chief Justice White, Justice McKenna, Justice Van Devanter, and Justice McReynolds concurred. They characterized the act of Congress as a revolution in constitutional law. The case was decided by a 5-to-4 vote; but the probability is that if the case was to be decided to-day it would not be decided the same way in which it then was. The bar of the United States stands aghast at that case. Certainly it would be unfortunate for Congress to attempt to extend that principle now.

However, suppose, Mr. President, that all that I have said is wrong; suppose that the pending bill is not an unconstitutional invasion of the rights of the individual; then it seems to me very clear that it is the height of unwisdom for Congress now in time of peace to launch into a policy of price fixing. Many of us are committed to the policy of "less Government in business"; and yet here, by this bill, we go further toward putting Government into business than has ever before been done in time of peace. As has been so well pointed out by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the measure now before us goes further even than the war-time Lever Act, because the pending bill would abrogate contracts in existence; it would penalize them and make them unenforceable; make it impossible to carry them out, though they were contracts which were entered into before this bill was ever presented in either House of Congress. Even if it were not unconstitutional, it seems to me it would be the height of unwisdom to proceed along that line.

It is proposed that the Government shall go into the coal business and regulate it from Washington, as if we had forgotten that the one business that we do regulate from Washington, railroading, is to-day probably in a worse condition than any other business. Its prices to the citizen are higher and the service which it renders is worse than that of any business which is still left in private hands.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to say that I think this bill, if it were passed, would not be effective. It would be the easiest thing imaginable to avoid it. Let us take the case of a mine which is selling coal to a customer in another State. This proposed act would apply to that mine if it chose to sell at a higher price than the fuel distributor thought was fair. It would be denied cars by the Interstate Commerce Commission if it made a sale at a higher price than the fuel distributor permitted. The obvious thing for that mine to do, if it is approached by its customer for another purchase, is to say, "We will not sell you coal in interstate commerce, but if you will come here into our State and will buy the coal here and accept delivery of it at the mine pit, we will sell to you and we will sell at such and such a price." Under such circumstances that mine would be entirely beyond the reach of this proposed act.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator say that a man may go into the State of Pennsylvania, buy coal and complete the transaction there, with the purpose to ship the coal elsewhere, and that such an act would be without the interstate commerce law?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The shipment of such a purchaser would be under the interstate commerce law, but he has not sold any coal; he has bought coal.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but he has bought it for delivery, has he not, in another State?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. And is not such a transaction under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The customer, the man who has bought the coal, may be penalized, but certainly the man who is selling it and is exacting a high price would not be penalized because he is making delivery at the mine, and he is beyond our reach.

Mr. President, a good deal has been said about protecting the consumer. More than 90 per cent of the consumers of coal in this country are retail consumers. They buy locally; they buy from coal yards; and we ought not for one moment to delude ourselves with the thought that there is a syllable in this bill which will protect them from profiteering, because the transaction when they buy from a coal yard is purely intrastate and is beyond the reach of Congress. The proponents of the bill do not pretend that this bill will apply to those retail transactions. So our domestic consumers from all over the country ought not in fairness to be led to think that there is the slightest vestige of protection for them in this bill, because the fact is that they will be just as subject to profiteering if it shall pass as they are at this moment.

Mr. President, that is my opinion of this bill. I venture to state in conclusion that never before has it been suggested in the American Congress that a commodity privately owned should be regulated in price by an appointive officer and an appointive commission here in Washington, who will not only fix the price retroactively as well as prospectively, but will do it without notice to the victim, the owner of the commodity—without hearing his proof or his arguments and without affording to him the slightest vestige of compensation for that part of the value of his property which has been confiscated.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if I correctly understand the argument of the able Senator from Pennsylvania, it is that the right to profiteer in coal and charge extortionate prices is under all circumstances and all conditions a vested right which can not be in any way interfered with by the Government of the United States. I think I have stated correctly the position of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

He states further that we are committed—I suppose he means upon this side of the aisle—to less Government in business; but, Mr. President, the entire country is crying out to-day because in a crisis like this, the States having no power, the Government is refusing to exercise or has failed up to this time to exercise such power as it may have to bring relief to the people.

The Senator from Pennsylvania takes the position, in the first place, that we are without constitutional power to give them relief; and in the second place that, even if we had the power, it ought not to be exercised. That leaves us in this situation, Mr. President, that we may assume that the great masses of the people not living in coal-producing States may freeze during the coming winter; that the owners of the coal mines may charge $50 a ton if they choose; and that the Government of the United States is helpless under the Constitution, but even if it had the power it ought not to exercise it to save the Nation.

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words with reference to the constitutional power. I shall be very brief; I shall not go over the ground so very ably discussed yesterday by the Senator from Iowa and the decisions which he quoted—the Stockyards case and the Wisconsin rate case—which clearly laid down the proposition that if there be a practice in interstate commerce that lays an undue burden or restriction upon interstate commerce it is within the regulatory power of Congress. The latest opinion upon that subject of our court is in the Coronado case, which is familiar to all Senators, where Chief Justice Taft, in rendering the opinion, after stating that coal mining is not interstate commerce as such and that the power of Congress does not extend to its regulation as such, went on to say:

> Obstruction to coal mining is not a direct obstruction to interstate commerce in coal, although it, of course, may affect it by reducing the amount of coal to be carried in that commerce. We have had occasion to consider the principles governing the validity of congressional restraint of such indirect obstructions to interstate commerce in Swift v. United States (196 U. S. 375), United States v. Patten (226 U. S. 525), United States v. Ferger (250 U. S. 199), Wisconsin Railroad Commission v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, decided February 27, 1922, and Stafford v. Wallace, decided May 1, 1922—

The last two cases being the ones analyzed yesterday by the Senator from Iowa. Then he says:

> It is clear from these cases that if Congress deems certain recurring practices, though not really part of interstate commerce, likely to obstruct, restrain, or burden it, it has the power to subject them to national supervision and restraint.

Mr. President, in the Stockyards case, analyzed by the Senator from Iowa yesterday, one of the reasons—in fact, the principal reason—upon which it was sustained was that regulation was necessary to prevent exorbitant charges, and that exorbitant charges would impose an undue burden upon interstate commerce.

In the Wisconsin rate case it was held that although the Federal Government has no jurisdiction over intrastate rates as such, yet if intrastate rates be too low they place an undue burden upon interstate rates, because under the Constitution the carrier is entitled to a reasonable return upon the value of his property devoted to such transportation use.

But, Mr. President, I want to discuss for a moment the subject from a little different angle, and that is the proposition that in an emergency like the present the sale and purchase of coal is clothed with a public interest, and, being so clothed, is subject to regulation by Congress, even to price-fixing if we chose to exercise it. May I say, in passing, that this is not a price-fixing bill. All that this bill does is to lay the foundation and give the reason for a discrimination that under other circumstances would be unlawful against those charging exorbitant prices.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has referred to the rent cases. It will be remembered that in the rent cases—the one going up from the District and the other an appeal from the State of New York—the power in the one case of Congress to regulate rents, declaring an emergency existing, and in the New York case a like declaration of an emergency on the part of the State of New York, were decided. In the case coming up from the District, however—Block v. Hirsh—the court says:

> Housing is a necessary of life. All the elements of a public interest justifying some degree of public control are present. The only matter that seems to us open to debate is whether the statute goes too far.

"Housing is a necessary of life." Mr. President, is housing any more a neccessary of life than coal is a necessary of life? If there be any distinction at all between the two, is not coal more of a necessary of life than shelter? And having found that an emergency existed, and accepting the declaration of Congress that such an emergency did exist—a declaration similar to that which is contained in this bill—the court then goes on to say:

> But if the public interest be established the regulation of rates is one of the first forms in which it is asserted, and the validity of such regulation has been settled since Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S. 113).

Then they say:

> The general proposition to be maintained is that circumstances have clothed the letting of buildings in the District of Columbia with a public interest so great as to justify regulation by law.

If that be true of housing in the District of Columbia, is it not a thousand times more true with reference to the existing coal situation, where we have not one-half of the car facilities to-day necessary to provide the coal that this country needs? In this case the right of Congress to regulate rents in the District of Columbia was sustained as an exercise of the police power. It may be said, however, that the United States as such has no police power. That is a statement that is very often made, and yet the courts have repeatedly stated that in the regulation of interstate commerce Congress may and Congress does exercise what is in the nature of police power, and in so far as interstate commerce is concerned our control over it is exactly the same as is the control of the States in the exercise of their police power.

Cooley, in the last edition of Constitutional Limitations, says:

> The line of distinction between that which constitutes an interference with commerce and that which is a mere police regulation is sometimes exceedingly dim and shadowy, and it is not to be wondered at that learned jurists differ when endeavoring to classify the cases which arise. It is not doubted that Congress has the power to go beyond the general regulations of commerce, which it is accustomed to establish, and to descend to the most minute directions, if it shall be deemed advisable; and that to whatever extent ground shall be covered by those directions the exercise of State power is excluded. Congress may establish police regulations as well as the States, confining their operation to the subject over which it is given control by the Constitution.

Citing a number of cases.

Mr. President, I think I understood from the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] that this measure could be defeated by a party going into a coal-producing State, buying the coal there, completing the contract, and that was an intrastate matter and not an interstate one, and therefore not within the control of Congress by regulation. I think the Senator, upon my inquiry, took the position that while the purchaser might be subject to interstate commerce the seller was not. But, Mr. President, in the case of Pennsylvania Railroad Co. against The Sonman Coal Co. the court said, citing Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. Clark Coal Co. (238 U. S.)—and I have not that here before me:

> We there said of the sale and delivery of coal f. o. b. at the mine for transportation to purchasers in other States: "The movement thus initiated is an interstate movement and the facilities required are facilities of interstate commerce."

And I have here a number of cases where the entire transaction is held to be a part of interstate commerce, where the commodity or the great bulk of the commodity is intended for shipment to other States than that in which the transaction occurs.

In that connection I want to refer to the case of Lemke against Farmers' Grain Co., of Embden.

In this case, as Senators will remember, the State of North Dakota undertook to authorize its administrative officials in effect to fix the price of wheat. Wheat was brought by a farmer to a country elevator in North Dakota and there sold to that country elevator, and the officials of North Dakota attempted to exercise that power; but it was resisted upon the ground that the entire transaction was one of interstate commerce, and therefore beyond the power of the State of North Dakota to regulate. The court said:

It is alleged that such legislation is in the interest of the grain growers and essential to protect them from fraudulent purchases and to secure payment to them of fair prices for the grain actually sold. That may be true, but—

Mark the words—

Congress is amply authorized to pass measures to protect interstate commerce if legislation of that character is needed. The supposed inconveniences and wrongs are not to be redressed by sustaining the constitutionality of laws which clearly encroach upon the field of interstate commerce placed by the Constitution under Federal control.

It is established by many cases that if a purchaser of coal buys coal in a coal-producing State to be shipped elsewhere that State has no right, under the police power or otherwise, to regulate that transaction. The State of Pennsylvania undoubtedly has a right in an emergency like this, if it sees fit to exercise it, in the exercise of its police powers, to fix the price that operators shall charge for their coal to residents of Pennsylvania to be consumed in Pennsylvania; but the State of Pennsylvania has no right under any circumstances to fix the price that operators in Pennsylvania shall charge for coal for shipment outside of the State. Therefore, the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania leads us to this: The States have no power to protect against profiteering and extortion, and he says the Federal Government, although it be interstate commerce, has no power to prevent profiteering and extortion.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not recall saying that the Federal Government had no power to prevent profiteering, but I did say it had no power to prevent it by this method. Would the Senator say that the Federal Government did not have power to condemn supplies of coal and pay the full market price?

Mr. LENROOT. For its own purposes or for the public at large?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. For either?

Mr. LENROOT. For either. If the Senator concedes the power of the Federal Government to exercise the right of eminent domain to furnish coal for the people of the United States it seems to me the Senator must then concede the power of regulation of coal when shipped in interstate commerce, because in either case it must be clothed with a public interest and taken for a public use. We have no power under the right of eminent domain to take the property of any individual except for a public use, and if the Senator admits that we have the right to exercise the right of eminent domain for the protection of the people of the United States against profiteering, it seems to me it necessarily must follow that we have a like right under the express power to regulate commerce in the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution to protect them from profiteering.

But, Mr. President, as I stated in the beginning, this bill is simply one that deals with the furnishing of facilities and authorizes discriminations that enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to say to a man, "If you are practicing extortion, if you are profiteering, the Federal Government, having control over the facilities, will not furnish you those facilities." That is all—nothing more.

The Senator referred to the child-labor case. Mr. President, although I think the decision was wrong in that case, and I think Justice Holmes in the dissenting opinion had very much the best of the reasoning, nevertheless it must be admitted that in that case there was nothing in the article itself, or in dealing with the article as it entered into interstate commerce, which could invoke the regulatory power, unless it be granted that the power to regulate is absolutely the power to prohibit, which the court denied.

What distinguishes this case? In the first place, the commodity must become a part of interstate commerce before this bill applies at all; and, in the second place, before the bill attaches and the discrimination can be invoked somebody must be guilty of exacting unreasonably high prices.

Can the Senator point to any distinction between that kind of a case and the Commodity case where a railroad was denied the power, as I recollect it, to transport commodities where it itself produced those commodities prohibited by the statute?

What gives us the power in this case is not the material coal but it is the transaction with reference to it, exactly as we have power over restraints of trade by reason of conspiracies and monopolies. It is the course of dealing with reference to it in interstate commerce that gives us our power.

So it seems to me we are abundantly justified in authorizing this discrimination with reference to car facilities, with reference to car service, where one demanding that car service is profiteering or extorting. The result of it simply is that we have this car shortage, and under the operation of this bill the Interstate Commerce Commission will say that the man who sells his coal to the public at a reasonable price shall have priority over one who refuses to so sell at a reasonable price. Or they may go further than that. They may say that the man who sells at an unreasonably high price shall not have these facilities at all, and I deny that anybody has any vested right under the Constitution to enter into interstate commerce for profiteering and extortion.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator has stated that before these penalties for profiteering can attach somebody must be guilty of exacting unreasonably high prices. Does the Senator think that it is fair or American or constitutional to find a man guilty in that way without notice to him and without hearing his proof or his arguments?

Mr. LENROOT. I did not mean guilty in a criminal sense, and I should not have used that word. I should have said committting the act of charging unreasonably high prices. As between that man and the man who is not charging a high price I say, irrespective of any other reason, that when we have a car shortage the preference ought to be given to the man who is willing to sell his coal at a reasonable price.

So far as contracts are concerned, of course this pending amendment does not affect the validity of a contract unless it be the kind of a contract where the agreement is to deliver coal on cars, or to deliver to another State, prior to a given date. In that case this amendment would affect not only the pending bill but would destroy existing law and enable the man who had a contract for coal to secure his cars because he had a contract that the coal should be loaded upon cars at a certain date.

The Supreme Court, by a divided court, it is true, decided that the rent law was constitutional, a law passed in an emergency not to be compared for a single moment with the present emergency in the United States, an emergency affecting nearly all of the people of the United States, which does affect all the people of the United States living in States who are not so fortunate as to have coal produced within their borders. Does anyone believe that the Supreme Court will say that under this emergency the sale and purpose of coal are not clothed with a public interest, and under such circumstances that Congress may not, under the commerce clause, exercise police powers in doing what it is proposed to do by this bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I have but one question I should like to ask the Senator, and that is this: If this new departure in public policy, if this new policy in price fixing without giving notice to the owner of the commodity, is such a beneficent thing for the country as a whole, would the Senator be willing to provide in this bill that in case hereafter we shall have a similar emergency because of short crops, or any other cause, in wheat or cotton or other commodities likewise tinged with public use, there should be a Federal wheat distributor, or a Federal cotton distributor, or a Federal short-ribs distributor, or whatever might be appropriate, so that that emergency could similarly be coped with by denying to every farmer any transportation facilities if he charged more than some official in Washington might think was fair?

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad, indeed, to answer the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania. In the first place, I am not willing to permit anybody but Congress itself to declare such an emergency as this bill declares. Congress should be the one to declare the emergency in which this unusual power is to be exercised, and if an emergency shall hereafter arise, such as the Senator from Pennsylvania indicates, if there should at some time in the future be only half enough wheat in the country to supply the population of the country, I would be the first to advocate the declaring of an emergency similar to this, and give some Federal authority power to control the distribution and the price of wheat; and I should be very sorry, indeed, if the Senator from Pennsylvania would not join in such an action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Add at the end of section 5 the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as changing or amending the present law as to assigning cars for handling or transporting coal on contracts entered into prior to July 25, 1922.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, all I desire to say in reference to the amendment just offered by the Senator from South Carolina is that it is exactly the same as the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia with the exception that it fixed July 25 as the date instead of the 1st of September. It is as obnoxious in principle and as repugnant to the desire of those who want to control this subject as was the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia. I hope it will not prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Harreld	Nicholson	Sterling
Bursum	Heflin	Oddie	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Underwood
Cummins	Kellogg	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	King	Reed, Pa.	Warren

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

McCumber	McLean	Smoot	Swanson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the Sergeant at Arms be requested to report whether he has been able to secure a quorum. He has had such an order since yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that he is informed at the desk that the Sergeant at Arms never makes a report upon an order such as the one made yesterday requesting the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. CURTIS. That order is still in force; it has not been revoked.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not object, of course, to getting a quorum here, for I hope a quorum may be obtained, but, without a special order of the Senate, it seems to me clearly that when a quorum responds that of itself revokes the order directing the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

After a little delay, the following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Ashurst	Broussard	Myers	Shortridge
Borah	du Pont	Owen	Trammell

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Sergeant at Arms is ready to report, I should like to find out the status.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will report.

The ASSISTANT DOORKEEPER (C. A. Loeffler). Forty-four Senators are out of the city; 47 Senators are present on the roll call; 5 Senators are in the city whom the Sergeant at Arms has been unable to reach. Efforts have been made to reach them either at their offices or at their residences.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the order which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves the adoption of the order which will be read by the Secretary.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Sergeant at Arms be directed to use all necessary means to compel the attendance of absent Senators, excepting those detained on account of sickness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the order.

The order was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 7, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, September 6, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by its Chief Clerk, John H. Hollingsworth.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The Chief Clerk laid before the House the following communication:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., September 6, 1922.

To the CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

I hereby designate Hon. HORACE M. TOWNER to act as Speaker pro tempore during my absence.

F. H. GILLETT.

Mr. TOWNER assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God, our heavenly Father, who art the master of the night and the glory of the day, hear our little prayer. Let the light of Thy truth into all our hearts and may it clear away all prejudice, misconception, and ignorance. O give us to feel that it is a great honor to be assigned to the service of our country and labor for the welfare of our fellows. Teach us how to harden ourselves against trouble, loss, and fear. Through Christ. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3790. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., for the disposal of the surplus waters of Milk River, Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks, not needed by the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation for domestic or irrigation purposes.

S. J. Res. 48. Joint resolution authorizing retirement as warrant officers of certain Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Kansas what the program is?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What is the question?

Mr. WINGO. I reserved the right to object to the approval of the Journal for the purpose of finding out what the program will be for the rest of this session of Congress. Have the Republicans agreed upon a date for final adjournment, and have they agreed when the conference reports shall be brought in on the bonus and the tariff?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There has been no thought or agreement as to when the session will adjourn. There is very good prospect that the conferees will bring in an agreement on the tariff bill Monday. In any event, if an agreement has not been reached, votes will be asked from both the House and the Senate on some of the questions in disagreement. It is the purpose to send out notices to-day in order to have the Members here on Monday with a view of terminating the action of the Congress on the tariff and bonus bill within the next week.

Mr. WINGO. As a matter of fact, the tentative program is to have the tariff conference report here on Monday and possibly the bonus report on that day or the next day, and to have the final adjournment on the 16th. Is not that the tentative program? Why not take the House into your confidence? Why not let the House know it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That matter has not been called to my attention.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has not been consulted on that? I naturally thought he would be.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not had a conference with anyone as to the date of the adjournment. I have with respect to the action of the conferees on the tariff bill and the possible bonus legislation.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does expect—he and the Republican leaders do expect—that the bonus bill and the conference report will be agreed to some day next week and go to the President some day next week?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And the Republican leaders do hope to adjourn Congress sine die on the 16th, which is Saturday week? That is the hope, is it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As I have stated to the gentleman, I have had no conferences with Members at the other end of the Capitol or with Members here with respect to the date of the adjournment.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman understands, however, that that is the hope and belief of the Republican leaders?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Whatever the hope may be, it has not been crystallized into conversation.

Mr. WINGO. That is the tentative program, so the gentleman understands?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman from Arkansas insists that that is the program, he has information that I have not yet received.

Mr. WINGO. Well, now, has the gentleman any information to give the House as to what will be the probable fate of the bonus if the bill goes to the President some day next week and in the meantime Congress adjourns? The gentleman knows what will happen under the Constitution to the bonus then, does he not? It will die.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman from Illinois is so anxious, I will object and give him the regular order.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 48, answered "present" 2, not voting 285, as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, September 7, 1922.

Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D., of the city of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in this hour we remember Thy Fatherhood. It is our joy and crown. We thank Thee for the multitude of Thy mercies, new every morning and fresh every moment. We pray for Thy blessing upon the United States Senate, now lawfully convened. Replenish them with the gifts of Thy Holy Spirit. Keep them this day in health and comfort. Deliver them from the machinations of bad men. Guide them in all ways that shall be in Thy wisdom through Thy favor. Endow them with Thy wisdom that is from above, and so use them that their work may be a benediction to their fellowmen and to the honor of Thy name. Bless our land and rebuke all mischief, all selfishness, all hatred. In all our borders let Thy favor abide. Bring abundant harvests and establish righteousness and peace as a blessing to the land and to the glory of Thy name. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE COAL SITUATION—MESSAGE OF GOVERNOR MILLER.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I request permission to insert in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings, in regular RECORD type, Governor Miller's recent message to the New York State Legislature urging the enactment of laws that would assure to the people of that State a fair and equitable distribution of coal during the coming winter. Inasmuch as we are to-day discussing coal legislation, it seems to me timely that the message of Governor Miller, which is such a complete elucidation of the subject, should be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate and the country.

There being no objection, the message was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

GOVERNOR MILLER'S MESSAGE.

The message of the governor convening the legislature was as follows:

"To the Legislature:

"Industrial disputes, impairing transportation and suspending the production of both anthracite and bituminous coal, recently threatened the paralysis of industry and now threaten widespread distress next winter from a shortage of domestic fuel.

"A few have set their wills above the public will, their selfish purposes above the interest of all. Winter approaches, a coal famine stares the people in the face, threatening acute distress among those least able to provide for themselves, but the dispute goes on.

"The disputants are too intent on carrying their points to consider the public welfare which it is the high function of government to promote.

"A nation-wide industrial dispute involving essential industries verges on revolution, and in fact is the method advocated by those who plot revolution, of whom there are still unfortunately too many in this country. Such a dispute, irrespective of its merits, is revolutionary, because it subordinates the general interest to the selfish interests of a few. It is subversive of free government because it subjects all the people to the tyranny of a few, and a government established to promote the general welfare can not tolerate the tyranny of any interest, group, or individual and endure. When the health, happiness, and welfare of all the people are placed in jeopardy, no matter how, the Government, to whom alone the public can look at such a time, must intervene, not alone to safeguard the public health and general welfare at the moment, but, if it is to accomplish its high purpose, to prevent a recurrence of similar jeopardy. The time for such intervention has now arrived.

"Emergencies may require the exercise by the Government of unusual powers, even limiting the freedom of individual action, but individual interest is subordinate to the general interest which must be supreme at all times. The individual has to surrender some liberty of action to preserve any. The extent of the public need is the measure of the surrender required, and of that the legislative authority, in the first instance at least, is the judge. I have therefore convened the extraordinary session to ask consideration of the measures which the State of New York may take to protect the public health and promote the general welfare in the present emergency.

"Happily, the resumption of mining in the bituminous fields has averted the threatened national calamity from the suspension of industry. The shortage of bituminous coal promises to be speedily relieved if the railroads are able to transport it. The menace at the moment arises from the shortage of anthracite coal. There are no stocks of anthracite anywhere, and surveys so far made indicate that there is less than the usual amount in the hands of consumers. Five months of production have already been lost and can not be made up, as, unlike the bituminous situation, the capacity of the anthracite mines is but little above the consumption of the country mostly during the winter months. The summer is the time for the accumulation of supplies for the winter. The summer production has been lost and the resumption of mining is not yet in sight. If production were resumed to-morrow the situation would probably be aggravated by the impairment of railroad equipment which will soon be taxed to move the crops.

"Whatever happens there is bound to be a shortage of domestic fuel and every day's delay in the resumption of mining now adds in increasing ratio to the menace. There is bound to be such a shortage as to require rationing to insure every one a fair share of what there may be. Hoarding and gouging always attendant upon a shortage must be prevented. In any case unless the State intervenes those who can pay most will be served first, whereas the least able must be our first concern, for they are totally unprepared to cope with a fuel shortage. We must practice rigid economy. That may have to be enforced. Those who have anthracite coal should have it all for severe weather. It will be easier to use substitutes now and during the cold snaps of fall and early winter than after cold weather sets in. Oil, gas, and electricity should be substituted for anthracite whenever possible and people should equip themselves with the facilities to use them.

"Wood will have to be used by those who can procure it and it is well to lay in a stock now. There promises to be enough bituminous coal if it can be transported to care for the needs of industry and the public utilities and we must learn how to use it for domestic fuel. Hydroelectric energy may have to be diverted from industrial to household uses. Light, heat, and power, however produced, may have to be regulated and their use possibly curtailed for some purposes. In a word, the State must intervene or leave the public to shift for themselves in a situation which has got beyond the operation of economic law or the power of individual action. The State must intervene in an emergency or confess that, except under normal conditions, it has not the power, the capacity, or the energy to serve the high purpose of its creation, i. e., the promotion of the general welfare.

"The foregoing suggestions relate only to palliatives—to measures of relief, not cure, but the State of New York has no coal to mine. It can neither start production now nor take measures to prevent a general suspension of production in the future. We can not even insure the receipt of our fair share of coal when mining is resumed, though we must be prepared to do our best to get our share. I trust that when mining is resumed the States will not have to compete for their fair share of coal with the inevitable inflation of prices and derangement of distribution consequent upon such competition at a time of an acute shortage, but it is beyond the power of this State to prevent that. If we do all we can we shall have the satisfaction at least of doing our best whatever happens and we can do much to prevent hardship and relieve distress even if the worst should happen.

"Briefly, I recommend the creation of a single-headed fuel administration with adequate power to supervise, regulate, and control the distribution, use, sale, and price of all fuel, and the creation of a revolving fund of at least $10,000,000 for the use of the administrator to finance any operations that may be required and to buy and sell fuel if necessary. Such operations should be conducted without loss to the treasury, which is fortunately in a condition to advance that amount or any additional sum that may be required. That sum should be ample, however, to provide all the financing required at a given time.

"I think it would be a grave mistake to attempt to substitute new for existing agencies of distribution, and I trust that supervision only will be required. But it is better not to interfere at all than to attempt interference without adequate power and energy, the possession of which may in fact make it possible to exercise a minimum of unusual powers.

"Perhaps the most doubtful powers suggested are those to buy and sell fuel and to fix prices or margins of profit. Such powers are not suited to normal times and conditions, but we are dealing with an emergency. I do not intend any reflection upon either producers or distributors, but the public can not be left to the mercy of any class, group, or individual however good their motives. Price fixing is contrary to all economic laws, but economic laws do not operate in an emergency such as we are dealing with. I am not unmindful of the objections to grants of extraordinary power by the legislature. The exercise of such powers begets the habit and accustoms the people to dangerous innovations. Such powers will rarely in the first instance be granted, except for a good purpose; but once exercised in time of emergency, they set the example and furnish the excuse for the demagogue to incite popular clamor for their continued exercise when there is no emergency and no occasion for them. It is often better to suffer temporary ills than to employ remedies which may do permanent harm. However, the Government should not in an emergency be left impotent to protect the very lives of the people for fear of setting a precedent which may be abused. Our reluctance to grant extraordinary powers should yield, precisely as constitutional limitations upon the exercise of such power yield, to compelling public necessity. I do not contemplate putting the State in the coal business. What I propose is that the agency created by us shall have power enough to make it unnecessary for the State to go into the coal business.

"The decisions of the Court of Appeals and of the United States Supreme Court in the so-called rent or housing cases appear to remove any doubt of the constitutional validity of the legislation proposed: People v. La Fetra (230 N. Y. 429); Levy v. Siegel (230 N. Y. 634); Block v. Hirsch (256 U. S. 135); Brown Co. v. Feldman (256 U. S. 170).

"Those cases involved both the fifth and fourteenth amendments of the Federal Constitution and similar provisions of the State constitution to which the exercise of the police power to protect the public health and promote the general welfare was held to be superior. The present emergency directly involves the public health and the general welfare. The temporary interruption of transportation due to terminal conditions in New York Harbor has on two occasions within recent years created conditions from lack of fuel in the tenement districts of New York, which no one can calmly contemplate having repeated on a larger scale. The courts have held that Government is not impotent in such an emergency and it is for us who are charged with responsibility to demonstrate its capacity to protect its citizens.

"I am submitting to you the single question of how to deal with the impending emergency due to a shortage of fuel because I deem that of paramount importance at the moment, and do not think the consideration of it should be embarrassed by extraneous subjects. This will enable you to consider the measures suited to the emergency, irrespective of whether they relate to State or municipal power. The present emergency is State-wide and must be dealt with as such by a single State agency, which will naturally have local representatives and possibly advisory committees in every locality and will cooperate with the mayors' committees and local organizations and agencies, and I trust will receive their cooperation as well as the hearty cooperation of the public. In the present emergency all must unite for the common purpose of promoting the general welfare.

"If anthracite mining is speedily resumed and if we are then favored with maximum production, maximum transportation service, and a mild winter we shall squeeze through without serious discomfort. If we are not thus favored the public may have to submit to some discomforts, but, in any case, I trust that if we make the maximum use of all our resources equitably distributed we shall be able to avert serious distress. At any rate, we can do no more than to create a suitable agency, backed by the power and resources of the State, and in the present emergency I do not think we can safely do less."

PETITION AND MEMORIAL.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions of the Laramie (Wyo.) Council of Industry, favoring the sustaining of the United States Supreme Court decree relative to the divorcement of the Central Pacific Railway from the Southern Pacific Co., which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Federated Shop Crafts, of Dallas, Tex., remonstrating against the issuance of the temporary injunction in the present railway strike, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 3540) fixing the fees of the examining surgeons in the Bureau of Pensions, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 907) thereon.

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6863) granting to certain claimants the preference right to purchase unappropriated public lands in the State of Arkansas, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 908) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 336) authorizing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to investigate all matters relative to the supply, demand, and marketing of cotton, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD (by request):

A bill (S. 3984) for the relief of the heirs of George S. Thebo; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3985) to declare the existence of a national emergency in the mining of coal and its transportation in interstate commerce and prohibiting practices which are pursued for the purpose of manipulating the prices of coal; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3986) to transfer to the Federal Farm Loan Board the powers, duties, and functions, and the assets, funds, securities, and liabilities of the War Finance Corporation; to provide for the discount of negotiable paper representing debts incurred for agricultural purposes or uses or for the raising of live stock; and to promote the orderly marketing of agricultural products to accommodate the normal and current demand for consumption of such products in the United States; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT OF LIBERIAN LOAN JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia; which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD INVESTIGATION.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk a resolution which I ask to have read and considered at the present time.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 344) as follows:

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that while deflation was being conducted under the direction of Governor Harding of the Federal Reserve Board that he permitted the Federal reserve bank officials of the regional bank of New York City to appropriate out of the earnings of that bank, 60 per cent of which belonged to the Federal Government, more than $20,000,000 for the purpose of erecting a Federal reserve bank building in the city of New York; and

Whereas that amount of money is more than it cost the Government to build the Capitol of the Nation, the House and Senate marble office buildings, and the State, War, and Navy Building, all four of them; and

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that the said Governor Harding permitted the officials of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York City to use the tremendous earnings made during the period of drastic deflation to greatly increase their salaries and the salaries of the clerks and agents of said banks, increasing clerks' salaries from $1,200 to $12,000, from $1,600 to $16,000, and from $1,800 to $18,000; and

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that the said Governor Harding permitted the bank officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks to increase their salaries for the year ending June, 1922, over the salaries paid for the year 1918 more than $15,000,000; and

Whereas that increase alone is three times as much money as it costs the Government of the United States to pay the annual salaries of the Vice President and the Speaker of the House, all the Members of both branches of Congress, all the members of the Supreme Court of the United States, the President and his Cabinet, the members of the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the General of the Army, and the Admiral of the Navy; and

Whereas neither the then governor of the Federal Reserve Board, W. P. G. Harding, nor the officials of the Federal reserve banks have denied said charges; and

Whereas the failure to challenge and disprove these grave and serious charges has had the effect of creating in the public mind apprehensions and suspicions of a serious nature regarding the alleged conduct of said officials in these matters; and

Whereas the allegations in said charges involving the wanton extravagance with, and the brazen misuse of, funds belonging in part to the Federal Government are of such a character as to call for an investigation on the part of the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators, composed of Democrats and Republicans, five from the majority party, and four from the minority, be appointed by the Vice President to investigate and report on said charges, and said committee is hereby authorized and empowered to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses upon said investigation, and to pay the expenses incurred out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution go over under the rule.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that this resolution involves a very important matter. It contains three very grave charges. The Senate may not be in session for more than a couple of weeks, and the Senate and the country are entitled to know whether or not the money of the Government is being squandered by the Federal Reserve Board in the manner indicated in the resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator from Alabama with reference to that matter, but no member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate is now present. There are a great many whereases in the resolution, and I think it should go over until other Senators may have an opportunity to read and consider it. I therefore object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to observe that, in any event, the resolution must at some time be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. My understanding is that under the rule the resolution goes over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over until to-morrow upon objection.

Mr. CURTIS. I object to the present consideration of the resolution, and ask for the regular order.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that September 6, 1922, the President approved and signed the following acts:

S. 813. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets NW.; and

S. 2597. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning where the Senate left off when the calendar was last under consideration, and continue the consideration of such bills until 2 o'clock to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, what is the object in not proceeding with the consideration of the coal bill?

Mr. CURTIS. If I might say so, I have consulted with the chairman of the committee who has charge of that bill and he said that he would like to have it go over until 2 o'clock.

Mr. KELLOGG. As the chairman of the committee desires that the bill shall go over until 2 o'clock, I have nothing further to say; but if there is some reasonable necessity for passing the bill, action upon it should not be delayed. I should like to read to the Senate a few letters which I have received this morning in reference to the price of coal, which is now running from $10 and $11 to $12 a ton at the mines.

Mr. CURTIS. I have stated to the Senator from Minnesota that I made my suggestion that the coal bill go over until 2 o'clock at the request of the chairman of the committee. If the Senator from Minnesota wishes to object to my request, let him object.

Mr. KELLOGG. I shall not object, of course. If the Senators desire that the bill shall go over and fool along with it, they may follow that course; but I think the bill ought to be passed. What is going on to-day at the mines is an outrage. The demand is being made that public utilities pay $11 and $12 a ton for coal. They are denouncing such prices, and are saying that they will go bankrupt if such prices are to prevail. Other consumers are also protesting.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw my request.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw it.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw it.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. STANFIELD. I should like to ask unanimous consent to report three bills from the Public Lands Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reports will be received out of order.

Mr. KELLOGG. I object. I ask that the Senate go ahead with the coal bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the Senator from Minnesota had better move that the bill be taken up.

Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LENROOT. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is now nothing before the Senate. The regular order is the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent that the coal bill may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before that is done, I should like to say that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], from the Public Lands Committee, desires to report two or three bills which have been pending for some time and to which there can be no objection. Two of the bills pertain to matters in the State of Florida. The Senator from Oregon is here ready to submit the reports, and has asked that he be permitted to do so. The bills can be disposed of in a couple of minutes, and I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to withhold his request for a moment and let the reports be made, and the bills to which I have referred be acted upon.

Mr. KELLOGG. To what reports does the Senator from Florida refer?

Mr. FLETCHER. To reports from the Public Lands Committee respecting two matters in the State of Florida, which are purely local in character, and will not take more than a minute of the time of the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no objection to that if it does not lead to debate.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I do not think it is fair to other Senators upon the floor to make an exception in the case suggested by the Senator from Florida. We shall have an opportunity to take up the calendar when the pending business is disposed of. I think we ought to get right at the important piece of legislation which is now pending.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with the Senator as to that. I have no desire to delay the pending measure.

Mr. LENROOT. But other Senators would have the same right as the Senator from Florida to ask for the consideration of bills.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] has been busy at the committee hearings; he hurried over here in order to submit the reports, but arrived just after the order of presentation of reports of committees had been closed.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection to the reports being presented.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is ordinarily known as the coal bill, and the Chair inquires whether there is objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to ask the Senator if he will not allow the reports to which I have referred to be made.

Mr. LENROOT. Let us get the coal bill before the Senate first.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry. If we proceed with the consideration of the coal bill is it the intention that we shall have this week, if possible, a day on which we may proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar?

Mr. CURTIS. I announced day before yesterday that later in the present week, or next week, I would ask for a day to be devoted to the consideration of bills on the calendar, but it is desired first to dispose of the two coal bills, if that may be done.

Mr. SMITH. The reason why I make the inquiry is because I have a resolution to offer which I do not suppose it will take long to consider and dispose of. I did not care to bring it up to embarrass the pending measure, and if we are going to complete that measure let us complete it.

Mr. LENROOT. I think we can pass both the coal bills to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not want to make objection; I want to go on with the coal bill, but I again ask the Senator to allow the two local measures in reference to the State of Florida to be reported and considered. I think they can be disposed of in a very short time.

Mr. LENROOT. Let the coal bill be laid before the Senate and then the Senator can ask unanimous consent to take up the bills to which he has referred, and I will not object to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12472? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

LANDS IN THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield for a moment in order that reports may be submitted on the bills to which I have referred and the bills may be acted upon? It will not take more than a moment or two.

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. STANFIELD. From the Committee on Public Lands I ask unanimous consent to report favorably three bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reports will be received.

Mr. STANFIELD. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 3641) to grant and confirm to the State of Florida title in and to sections 16 within the exterior limits of the area patented to the State of Florida April 23, 1903, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 905) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, before the word "mineral," to strike out "now known or believed to be"; in line 8, after the word "not," to strike out "now," and in the same line, after the word "occupied," to insert "on May 27, 1922," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the unsurveyed sections 16 within the exterior limits of the area patented to the State of Florida April 23, 1903, under the provisions of the act of September 28, 1850, Ninth Statutes at Large, page 519, embracing the so-called Everglades, not mineral in character, and not occupied on May 27, 1922, by bona fide settlers under the homestead law, be, and the same are hereby, reserved, granted, and confirmed to the State of Florida for the benefit of public schools as though the official surveys had been extended over such lands.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STANFIELD. From the Committee on Public Lands I also report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 8763) validating and confirming a certain indemnity school-land selection of the State of Florida, and I submit a report (No. 906) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER. I also ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following Florida indemnity school-land selection be, and the same is hereby, validated and confirmed, notwithstanding its inclusion within an abandoned military reservation, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to approve the same to the State of Florida, if the selection list is in all respects regular and accompanied by the necessary fees: Gainesville, 016649, filed May 1, 1920, covering the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 28, township 54 south of range 42 east, Tampa meridian, Florida, 40 acres.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, we listened all day yesterday to the arguments of the Senators from certain coal States, and other Senators who wanted some contracts fulfilled, that there ought to be no preference as to the furnishing of cars between those demanding an exorbitant price for coal and those demanding a reasonable price.

The amendment which was before the Senate provided as follows:

Nor shall car service be denied to any person or corporation because of any prices named in any such preexisting contract.

Now, I want to show the Senate the kind of contracts that coal speculators are making, and the kind of contracts that these Senators wish to protect. I have some letters here. They are a few picked out of a large bundle of letters, hundreds of which are coming in daily, about the coal situation.

Here is a letter from Charleston, W. Va., dated August 28, 1922, written by the Kanawha Valley Coal Co. to the E. A. Poe Brick Co., Fayetteville, N. C.:

GENTLEMEN: Referring to your letter of the 17th.

Due to the scarcity of coal, we are not screening anything now, but can let you have a couple or three cars of good ROM—

That is not "rum." That is "run-of-mine" coal, I think—in box cars for prompt shipment on basis of $7 per net ton f. o. b. mines, cash with order. The boxes will contain about 40 tons each.

Please advise promptly if you want shipment made.

At your service,

KANAWHA VALLEY COAL CO.,
By O. J. COX, President.

At the bottom is written in red—I suppose intended to be written in blood—"Coal is cash."

That is the kind of letters we are getting from West Virginia and from Kentucky, and these are the men who want their contracts fulfilled, and want to force the Interstate Commerce Commission to get them cars in preference to the honorable, reasonable mine operators who are willing to ship their coal at a fair profit. I want the Senate to understand this.

Here is a telegram from Paducah, Ky.:

Notwithstanding the acceptance July 28 of your coal price by west Kentucky coal operators, we are to-day asked $10.50 at mines for slack coal. Coal operators now claim that you have failed to set price. This for your information and relief. If it is a fact that you have not set price to be charged, we trust you will demand that slack coal be sold at a materially lower price than mine run and lump. Public utilities will be bankrupt even at $3.50 per ton at mines.

PADUCAH WATER CO.

Now they are asking $10 a ton for slack at the mine in Kentucky! That is another telegram from a public utility.

Here is one from Savanna, Ill., addressed to John C. McKenzie, Rock Falls, Ill.:

In order that you may know the true condition existing in Savanna and territory served by us and how well the Hoover agreement is working relative to coal situation: We are quoted $12 mines on western Kentucky screenings which should be normally about $1.50. Freight rate approximately $3. This is absolutely prohibitive for us, and unless the situation is relieved soon this company will be compelled to shut down both gas and electric, which will cause flooding 3,000 acres of tilled land and Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. will be unable to procure water for their locomotives, shops, and roundhouses at this terminal point. We understand the principal cause of this shortage of coal is railroad congestion in western Kentucky. Can not something be done to relieve the situation.

PEOPLES GAS & ELECTRIC CO.

In reply to that, to relieve the situation, Senators are offering amendments to this bill to compel the railroad companies to give cars to fulfill that kind of a contract! If the Senators want to do that, I want them to do it with their eyes open.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. I have an amendment pending relative to the furnishing of cars for coal under contract, and I presume the Senator includes me along with others.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do.

Mr. DIAL. I think perhaps we can obviate some of this trouble and expedite a vote on this bill if the Senator will allow me to suggest another amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will allow the Senator to offer his amendment when I get through with my remarks. I will not yield for that purpose at this time. If the Senator wishes to withdraw his amendment, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not expect to withdraw it, but I wanted to offer an amendment to the amendment which would limit the price of coal, and that perhaps would meet the Senator's objection.

Mr. KELLOGG. I shall be glad if the Senator will wait until I get through with my remarks.

Mr. DIAL. Very well.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator then can offer all the amendments he pleases.

Here is another telegram:

CHICAGO, ILL., August 25, 1922.

AMERICAN PUBLIC UTILITIES CO.,
Grand Rapids, Mich.:

Offer you 25 cars American Eagle Cedar Grove Seam West Virginia mine run $6.25 net ton mines. Prompt shipment. Advise if interested.

FORT DEARBORN COAL CO.

Those are West Virginia reasonable prices!

Here is a telegram from the Alleghany Coal Corporation:

RICHMOND, VA., August 24, 1922.

WHITE FURNITURE CO.,
Mebane, N. C.

GENTLEMEN: Replying to yours 23d inst.

We quote you for prompt shipment in box cars the following coals, subject to immediate wire acceptance upon receipt of this letter and prior sale of coal offered, viz:

	Mines.
New River or Pocahontas ROM	$7.90
Kanawha or Thacker ROM	6.90
Upper Banner mine run	6.90

Very truly yours,

ALLEGHANY COAL CORPORATION,
E. S. CULLEN,
President and General Manager.

Here is another letter, dated August 4, 1922, a little earlier; but I have a whole bundle of them here if Senators are interested in them. This is dated Detroit, August 4, to the Holland Furniture Co., Holland, Mich. This is from the Evans Coal Co., evidently one of these dealers in coal who bought coal to resell:

We have your favor of August 3, and in reply beg to state that we can offer you our Kentucky or West Virginia mine-run coal at $9 per net ton f. o. b. cars mines.

There is another gentleman who has made some contracts for coal, and he is one of the kind of men hanging around the lobbies here, seeking to have the Senate put on an amendment that there shall be no discrimination in the use of cars for the delivery of coal on account of the contract price!

He says further:

If you are in need of coal, we would advise your taking advantage of our offer, as we believe the coal we now have en route will be the last we will have for some time to come, as all coal now being mined is either going to the railroads or public utilities under Government orders.

That is not true. He knew it was not true when he wrote it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator think that the bill he is advocating can reach a dealer in Michigan who is selling to a consumer in Michigan, such as his letter would indicate?

Mr. KELLOGG. This dealer in Michigan was advertising this coal f. o. b. the cars in West Virginia and Kentucky, to be shipped to Michigan; and if the Federal Government can not reach that, I want to know the reason why.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. What price was it?

Mr. KELLOGG. Nine dollars a ton f. o. b. cars, net.

Here is another telegram from the Ohio & Kentucky Coal Co. It is headed "Coal! Coal! Coal! Coal!" in four places, for fear the purchaser would not see it:

We have car numbers, 25 cars straight run-of-mines coal; originates southeastern Kentucky on Southern Railway, now en route Cincinnati, taking regular freight rate. We offer you any part of these 25 cars at $7.50 per ton f. o. b. mines. Terms, 50 per cent cash on receipt of bills of lading, balance upon receipt of invoices. Wire quick if can use, as this offer is subject to prior sale.

Buy your coal now.

That is another coal dealer who has contracts for coal.

Here is a letter from the Delano Coal Co. (Inc.), Philadelphia. This is written to the Colebrookdale Iron Co., Pottstown, Pa.:

GENTLEMEN: Acknowledging receipt of your favor of the 11th instant, asking us to ship you a car of Vinton smokeless run-of-mine coal at $4.50, regret very much to say the Vinton people are asking us to quote $8.50 per net ton f. o. b. cars mines, subject to prior sale on their coal.

If you wish us to ship you a car at this price kindly advise and we will get it off for you.

Very truly yours,

W. KISHBAUGH,
Vice President.

Mr. President, here is another:

[Western Union telegram.]

DETROIT, MICH., August 7, 1922.

HOLLAND CITY GAS CO.,
Holland, Mich.:

Offer subject to prior sale any part 125 cars Pittsburgh No. 8, Elkhorn, W. Va., mine run. Thirty-five cars of this coal on track Detroit. Can furnish car numbers with orders, price $9 f. o. b. mines. Wire acceptance quick if you want any of above coal.

UNITED COAL MINES (INC.).

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Where is that?

Mr. KELLOGG. Detroit, Mich. That is another one of these gentlemen who are making contracts.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Has the Senator any letters or telegrams from Indiana coal mines?

Mr. KELLOGG. Oh, I think so. I have not the time to go through them. There is a large bundle of them there. I do not want to weary the Senate with reading them. The fact is that every coal broker in all these cities who can get hold of any coal at the mines has already contracted for it at these exorbitant prices of $6, $8, $9, and $10 a ton.

It is now sought in the Senate to provide that no preference should be given in the use of cars to the fulfilling of contracts made for coal on account of the price.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator at what price he expects to buy coal?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mine run of good bituminous coal ought to be sold at the mines for from $2.50, down in Alabama, up to $3.50 in the high-price mines.

Mr. DIAL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think anybody will complain if there is a reasonable profit put on top of that. I know many of the West Virginia and Kentucky coal-mine operators have acted honorably, and have stuck by these prices. A percentage of them have not, and many of those who did at first are breaking away, and the coal speculators in the cities are getting hold of this coal. They have contracted for it, and they are now trying to force it on to the public at these absurd prices.

I am as much against price fixing as anybody else, but there is a limit to what the American people are going to stand. Is it expected that every two years we are going to have a coal strike, and be tied up for three or four or five months, and then that the American people are going to shell out money at the rate of ten or fifteen dollars a ton, enough to make up all the losses the mine operators have had, and a profit besides, and allow them to pay the miners what they please? If the public is to be ground between the upper and nether millstones in this way it is time the public understands it.

All I have to say is that if the Senate wishes to adopt an amendment to this bill which will take the life out of it and destroy its efficiency the Senate can do it, but it will never do it by my vote. I do not expect this bill will be a remedy for all of the evils which we are going to suffer by reason of this terrible shortage of coal on account of the coal strike, but it is the only immediate remedy which can be put into force, because transportation is what we are now lacking, and priority in the furnishing of cars is the only thing which will relieve this country.

I hope the Senate will see to it that these amendments are beaten, and that this bill is passed. Then let us take up the bill of the Senator from Idaho and have a general inquiry, to find out whether there is any remedy for the intolerable conditions through which the people of this country are going.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, yesterday I offered an amendment to the bill, and I now desire to modify that amendment. In order that the Senate may know what the amendment is, I will read it. It is as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as changing or amending the present law as to assigning cars for handling or transporting coal on contracts entered into prior to July 25, 1922, at not more than $2 per ton f. o. b. cars at mine.

I do not want to tire the Senate, but this bill ought to be designated as a bill to take care of the slothful and not of the energetic people of the country. Its object is to transfer coal from the coal mining country and the manufacturing country up to the lake region of the United States, where they have not contracted for their coal. I do not want them to get chilly this winter, but if they do it will be their fault and not mine, and I am not going to let this bill pass if I can help it. I am going to make the situation so plain that I think anybody will have to support this amendment.

I believe it was stated here yesterday by the able chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce [Mr. CUMMINS] that the railroads of this country take at least one-third of the coal that is mined, and I think that is correct. I do not know how much of the other coal is contracted for, but I imagine that the manufacturing interests of this country contract for at least 40 per cent of the coal mined. In fact, I imagine there is but little coal mined that is not contracted for ahead. In my part of the country we operate large mills, cottonseed-oil mills and various other kinds of plants which need coal, which operate by steam, and we make yearly contracts for coal.

I put the 25th of July in my amendment because I wanted to fix a safe date before any of this profiteering business was entered into. I am sorry I am not able to say when the contracts were entered into for a large part of the coal, but I do not favor profiteering. I have no interest in a coal mine. I was in a coal mine but once in my life. I believe I know personally but one man in the coal business.

I am not in sympathy with profiteering, but I am in sympathy with carrying out contracts made under the laws of this country. In the first place, I think this bill is teetotally unconstitutional. In the next place, it is immoral; it is wrong; it is an invitation to the coal operators by the Congress of the United States to abrogate their contracts. I want them to carry out their contracts. I do not care to monopolize the coal for our industries, of course, but I do want enough coal sent to my part of the country to carry those industries on.

The other day a mill in my State shut down for the want of coal, and threw 4,000 people out of employment; and they are still out of employment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator's amendment provides "that nothing herein shall be construed as changing or amending the present law as to assigning cars for handling or transporting coal on contracts entered into prior to July 25, 1922, at not more than $2 per ton." I presume the Senator means provided said contracts do not specify more than $2 a ton?

Mr. DIAL. Provided the coal is not sold at more than $2 a ton f. o. b. at mine.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator would put language in the amendment so that it would plainly convey the idea that these contracts should not carry a price above $2 a ton, I think it would be a very good amendment.

Mr. DIAL. That is what I intended to put in the amendment. If I have not put it in there, I would be glad to change the phraseology. That is the intention of the amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I suppose what the Senator wants is to provide by law that the contracts down in the part of the country to which he refers shall be fulfilled now?

Mr. DIAL. Fulfilled from now on.

Mr. KELLOGG. Whether any of the rest of the country gets coal for public utilities or not.

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not want the rest of the country to suffer, but I do not want our industries to shut down while the operators are selling coal at a higher price and transporting it somewhere else.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I speak only for myself, but so far as I am concerned, this amendment is entirely unobjectionable. It does not mean anything, however. It will not give any relief to the operators or to the contractors whom the Senator from South Carolina has in mind, simply because everybody knows that $2 a ton is not an unreasonable price at the mines, and everybody knows that the present law gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to discriminate, having in view the uses to which the coal is to be put.

The Interstate Commerce Commission now has the authority to say that coal being shipped to a cotton mill in order to keep it in operation is subordinate to coal being shipped to a public utility or coal being shipped to domestic consumers who must have coal in order to keep themselves warm and to live.

Mr. DIAL. My amendment does not interfere with that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the law now.

Mr. DIAL. I am willing to take my chances with the law.

Mr. SMITH. If my colleague will allow me, he has been contending from the first that he, together with others, has contracted for coal at a price which does not exceed $2, and that under this proposed bill the average price——

Mr. CUMMINS. In order to avoid further discussion, I am quite ready to say that I am willing to accept the amendment. It accomplishes nothing.

Mr. SMITH. That certainly is all we have been contending for from the beginning.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is not what has been contended for in the past. It is not what was contended for yesterday or the day before.

Mr. SMITH. The record ought to be kept right. My colleague has from the beginning stood for the fact that the price at which he bought his coal, whatever coal he did get under the administration, should not exceed that price.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not so remember it; but the amendments which were offered yesterday excluded from the operation of the law contract coal, no matter at what price it was contracted for.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know what the amendments offered were.

Mr. SMITH. The one offered by my colleague did not so provide.

Mr. BORAH. It does not make any difference what the amendments were yesterday. The question is, What are they to-day?

Mr. ROBINSON. What will they be to-morrow?

Mr. DIAL. I am very glad to have the amendment accepted, and that ends it.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from South Carolina is satisfied with it as it is to-day, let us adopt it.

Mr. DIAL. I am satisfied with it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course, if the chairman of the committee wants to accept it, I shall not object. All I have to say is that it may become necessary, before this coal shortage is over, to take coal to keep public utilities running, and, of course, what the Senator from South Carolina wants is to force the fulfillment of his contracts to run his cotton mills. But if the Senator from Iowa is willing to accept the amendment, of course, I have no objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfectly willing to take my responsibility in the matter, and I say that in my judgment the amendment means nothing whatever, and that it will not impair the efficiency of the law if we adopt it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator from Iowa, it is not the purpose of this bill, as he construes it, to abrogate existing contracts between purchasers of coal and vendors of coal?

Mr. CUMMINS. We have nothing to do with contracts whatever. The law does not relate to contracts.

Mr. KING. As I understand, the Senator from South Carolina contends that cotton mills and other industries in the South have contracts for the purchase of coal at approximately $2 per ton, and he does not want a law passed which would abrogate or interfere with or impair those contracts. The question of priority is a matter, however, which will have to be determined by the law, but he does not want any law passed which would interfere with those contracts or relieve the coal companies from meeting their obligations.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have been discussing that question for two days now with regard to the effect of this bill upon contracts if it becomes a statute. It will have no effect upon contracts. The law operates entirely upon the common carrier and relates to the distribution of cars on the part of a common carrier to the various mines. The Interstate Commerce Commission now has the authority to say that if coal is intended for a certain purpose, cars shall not be furnished for the transportation of that coal until the coal that is required for a more important purpose has been furnished. That is the law now, and this bill does not propose to change that law in any respect.

The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina is as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as changing or amending the present law as to assigning cars for handling or transporting coal on contracts entered into prior to July 25, 1922.

And he has added this morning the words, "at not more than $2 per ton f. o. b. cars at mine."

The purpose of the present bill is to prevent the shipment of coal at unreasonably high prices, and $2 per ton at the mine, as we all know, under present conditions is not an unreasonably high price. If we have the present law remaining unchanged so far as the equitable distribution of coal is concerned—that is, to supply coal for those purposes which we all recognize as of the highest importance compared with other uses of coal—that is all that we want to preserve.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from South Carolina is a very distinguished lawyer and he must have some purpose in offering the amendment. I would like to ask him what he thinks the amendment will accomplish.

Mr. DIAL. In answer to the Senator's question, there is a divided opinion as to the law directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to assign cars to transport coal and other commodities. I am not undertaking to go into any great detail.

Mr. LENROOT. Divided opinion as to anything except assigning upon the basis of price?

Mr. DIAL. Yes. I think the other day the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] had one opinion and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] held another view.

Mr. LENROOT. That was only upon the basis of price.

Mr. DIAL. Perhaps so, but my information is that the Interstate Commerce Commission has some doubt about the proposition. At any rate, without going into detail about what the law is, I am willing to let the old law stand and let the old contract stand. I do not want any profiteering or anything of that sort. I am against all that sort of thing, but I do not want Congress to lay itself open to the censure of inviting people to violate their contracts.

Mr. LENROOT. But how does the Senator think that the pending bill affects that situation in any way?

Mr. DIAL. The pending bill enables them to lay an embargo on shipments.

Mr. LENROOT. Only on account of price.

Mr. DIAL. I think possibly it would give them an excuse to go further and say that they would not care to ship to one customer, notwithstanding the price at which he purchased was lower than the price at which they cared to ship to another.

Mr. LENROOT. They would have that right under the present law.

Mr. DIAL. There is no question about that. I am willing to take my chances on that. In other words, I wish they did not have as much authority as they have, but having that authority I do not care to give them any more.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, what the Senator desires is to get coal for his industries in the South on their contracts, irrespective of the needs of the other sections of the country.

Mr. DIAL. That is a rather frank way of putting it, but that puts it in a word. I want our people to get coal, and that is what we all want. I want our people to get the coal they have bought and contracted for. What would the Senator have expected us to do—to have made no contracts, but wait until now and then make contracts at $4, $6, or even $10 a ton, whereas we contracted at $1.90 a ton for a very large quantity of coal? I have one constituent using eight carloads of coal a day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will pardon an interruption, I want to see whether I am mistaken or not.

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand that the Senator's amendment has anything in it about the South or any particular section of the country.

Mr. DIAL. Not a word.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or to give people who made contracts for coal in the South any advantage over people who made contracts for coal in any other section of the country.

Mr. DIAL. Of course not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is merely intended to maintain the sacredness of contracts made, provided that the contracts do not fix a price higher than the price which is fixed in the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DIAL. Absolutely. I think that is wrong, but I am willing to accept it.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to state that when I said the South I had also in mind people up in my country who have like contracts who would like to get coal for the same reasons the Senator's constituents would like to get coal, but I am not willing that Congress should by any act provide that they shall have their coal because they have a contract, irrespective of the public necessities.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would not be Congress providing that at all. It would be the free business of the country having already provided that. These people had a right to make the contracts, and those contracts ought to be respected provided that they were not contracts of such a character as would defeat the purpose of the bill. If the price is fixed at the mine, the contracts are not of such character as would defeat the purpose of the bill. The Senator from Wisconsin is taking the position that what the Senator from South Carolina has proposed is something new, something exceptional, something out of the ordinary. What he is demanding is a compliance with existing contracts as far as possible in keeping with the public interests.

Mr. LENROOT. In violation of existing law if they can do it. He said so frankly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it was not in violation of any law to make those contracts.

Mr. LENROOT. The existing law gives the Interstate Commerce Commission in time of emergency power to deny cars to anybody who has a contract if it is not in a preferential class.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, but they never had authority to forbid anybody making contracts for any commodity, even coal, at a special price.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, nobody claims that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was at first blush rather opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina. Talking to him yesterday about it I said, "My objection to your amendment would be dissipated if you would fix the price at a price not above what the commission would fix." That is all he has sought to do.

Mr. DIAL. That is true. It is a price much lower than the commission would fix, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I submit an amendment and ask that it be read. I am not sure, however, of the parliamentary situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment can not be offered to the amendment which was pending, because that amendment has been agreed to as amended.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest that the Senator wait until the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. KING. Very well. I have no objection.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words with reference to the pending bill. I want to disclaim any intention or effort to protect the class of profiteers referred to by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. My purpose in offering an amendment to protect existing contracts from the operation of the bill was only that the element of prices should not enter into the matter of the exclusion of cars from shippers where valid existing contracts were in force. I think the Senator from Minnesota, as well as the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill, misunderstood the amendment and the purpose of it. From the wording of it I do not think it could be construed as interfering with the present authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to exercise its powers in the issuing of priority orders for the benefit of essential industries.

But the bill gives authority to take into account a new element, the element of prices. It is absolutely new in time of peace to propose a remedy of this kind even for an emergency which may be supposed to exist. It is a very dangerous power to be placed in the hands of any person or commission, in my judgment. One can readily conceive of a situation, if the Government is to have absolute power, regardless of anything or of any condition in an existing contract, to refuse car service to shippers, where they could absolutely destroy certain lines of business. If it can be done with reference to the coal business in order to control prices under the spur of an emergency that may be supposed to exist, with reference to some other commodity, like power may be sought in order likewise to control the price of such commodity. It is one of the greatest grants of power in time of peace, if not the greatest grant of power in time of peace, that has ever been given to the central government. It goes even further than the legislation which was enacted during the war, when we all agreed that it was right even to strain the Constitution, if necessary, to prosecute the war to a successful conclusion, and there were some who contended that it was so strained.

If it is conceded that the General Government may control the prices of coal by interfering with the rights of shippers to obtain facilities for loading their commodities on common carriers, it may just as well be contended later that the same power should be granted with reference to steel, with reference to grain, with reference to building material, or with reference to a great many other commodities which are equally essential at various times to carry on the industries of the country.

Mr. President, a great deal of villification has been indulged in by Members of this body sometimes and by others in regard to the acts of producers of coal, no matter where situated. They have had very few defenders in this body or elsewhere. Because of the relatively small number of the producers of coal compared with the number of users of coal, it has been a very popular practice to bait the coal operator and to villify him and to impugn his motives, when he is and has been acting clearly and only under the constitutional guaranties to which every citizen is entitled under our form of government.

Now, the coal operators of the United States are by no means perfect men—no more perfect than men in other callings, but quite as perfect as men in other pursuits of life. They are, as a class, as patriotic a set of men as may be found in any other line of business. During the war they responded as readily to the call of their Government as did any other class of citizen. They made no outcry or complaint when it was decided to be wise, under the emergency then existing, to fix the price of their product, although the coal produced by them went into the manufacture of many other products which were sold at wholly unrestricted prices, thereby enabling many men in other lines of industry to receive greater profit that otherwise they would have received. Those engaged in the production of coal made every effort, even under those conditions, to produce coal in the largest possible quantities in order that the industries of the country might be kept fully supplied with that necessary product.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Who made that effort?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To what effort does the Senator from Minnesota refer?

Mr. KELLOGG. I refer to the effort to produce the largest amount of coal at a reasonable price?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The coal operators made that effort.

Mr. KELLOGG. Did all of them do so?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As a body, the coal operators did so.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not the Senator from West Virginia know that 30 per cent of the operators always refused to be bound by the agreement and charged whatever they could get, and that many of the others "ducked away" from it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from Minnesota is laboring under a misapprehension and is referring to a different period of time from that to which I am referring. I am referring to the war period, during which time prices were regulated under the fuel administration. I have not yet reached the point to which the Senator from Minnesota is referring.

Mr. KELLOGG. The coal operators had to do it then, because their prices were fixed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that the coal operators, however, did it voluntarily; they did it willingly; and they did it quite as willingly as did the constituents of the Senator from Minnesota when the price of their wheat was fixed.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield to me, I desire to ask if it is the Senator's opinion that during the war coal would have been produced at the price for which it was sold if it had not been for governmental interference?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That question does not enter into the proposition which I am stating at this time. The coal operators readily assented to the regulation of the price of their product and to the regulation of their business, though such regulation was done in a very bungling manner. I think, however, it was done, probably, as well as governmental agencies can usually solve complicated problems of that kind. The efforts made at that time demonstrate very conclusively what we shall have to contend with under the present emergency should the proposed legislation be passed, for it will operate very inefficiently. While the purpose may be good, and the administrators of the law will endeavor to make the necessary adjustments which are entailed by an interference with the ordinary flow of commerce, no man or no set of men, in my judgment, can make all the adjustments that are necessary when the ordinary course and flow of commerce have been interfered with.

During the war period, when the invitation came, the coal operators subscribed liberally to the bond issues of the Government, and often made sacrifices in order to do so. They responded in every other way to every call their Government made upon them. These men are high-class business men. Many of them are engaged in other undertakings, such as banking and similar business enterprises. In a given community or in a town storekeepers and bankers and others will get together and buy a piece of land and start in the coal business. When the term "coal operator" is used, many people have in mind only some gigantic monopoly which is bearing down hard upon the users of coal. As a matter of fact, however, there is probably no business which is more hazardous than is the business of producing coal.

The business is subjected to more vicissitudes in its ordinary operation than is, perhaps, any other business or certainly to as many vicissitudes as is any other business. Some of the obstacles to the successful prosecution of the coal business we hope may be removed. In the first place, the coal operators have only a seasonal market for coal. At times when transportation is more or less interfered with by reason of the winter weather the demand for coal is most urgent. During the summer, however, when transportation facilities are much more easily obtained and operated, there is very little demand for coal.

The business is also subject to the hazard of accident. If a mine is shut down for a time, one would naturally suppose that the expenses of the coal operators would cease, but that is not true. If, as is often the case, the mine is a shaft mine, as soon as work in the mine ceases and the pumps stop working, the mine is flooded with water, and the property is absolutely destroyed.

The coal operators also have to maintain a highly trained technical force in order to cope with the gases that are found in the mines and to rid the mines of those gases. In spite of the greatest care that they can possibly exercise the mines are often subjected to explosions, the results of which are terrible in the loss of life and of property.

It is easy to figure here on the floor of the Senate that coal ought to be sold at $2 a ton at the mine; that sounds well out in Minnesota and in some of the other States where coal is not produced; but I notice that when the products of those States are mentioned, such as wheat and other crops which are grown there, the Senators from those localities are delighted when market conditions are such that their constituents get top prices for their wheat and corn and various other products. Now, however, some of them are attempting, in contravention of constitutional rights, to interfere with the coal producers in selling their coal at the market price if the customers are willing to pay that price.

I have no sympathy whatever, Mr. President, with the profiteer, whether he be the producer or wholesaler in coal. I think the coal operators themselves realize that one of the greatest menaces to their business is what is known as a "runaway coal market." Some years ago, fearing that there would be such a "runaway coal market" and seeing that a shortage was about to occur, a number of the leading coal operators in the United States assembled and voluntarily agreed that the price of coal should not be allowed to go over $3 per ton. The agents of the Government in a very short time brought indictments against 100 or more of those operators. The case was tried in the city of New York, and they were put to an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars to defend themselves against criminal prosecution, when their only effort had been to protect the public against higher prices. Even while that trial was progressing in New York the Government itself asked the coal operators to come together here in Washington and agree upon a maximum price for coal. The coal operators were naturally loath to do so, having in mind the experience through which they were even then passing—being prosecuted for doing something which they regarded as in the public interest—but finally they acceded to the importunities of the Government and came here and conferred with the then administration with reference to the price of coal. Again they agreed upon a price, the same price which had previously been agreed upon, and it was considered by the Secretary of the Interior and others conversant with the situation to be an entirely fair price, although, as I recall, the Secretary of the Navy at that time, feeling that the Navy should be allowed to get coal at a cheaper price, refused to abide by that agreement.

So, Mr. President, those engaged in the production of coal have suffered interference of more than one kind. They are under rigid control of the State governments with reference to mine inspection, mine-safety appliances, and in all manner of ways relating to the operation of their mines, and thereby their cost of operation is greatly increased. If, as I said a while ago, a mine is shut down, even if it is not a shaft mine, a process of disintegration begins the very day the mine is closed. The roof begins to fall and deterioration goes on, so that if the mine should not be opened for a month or two months or six months later a very large expense must be undergone before that mine can again be operated.

There is nothing provided in this bill or any other bill to protect business men engaged in coal production from loss when the price of coal on the market is below the cost of operation. I have never heard on this floor from those representing coal-purchasing constituencies any offer to come forward and voluntarily pay even the cost of coal when market conditions are such that the coal operator can not get for his coal as much as it has cost to produce it.

An exceedingly small percentage of men in the coal-producing business could be under any fair allegation charged with responsibility for such prices as have been named by the Senator from Minnesota. As I said yesterday, the greatest part of the coal production of my State and other States is under contract from a period prior to the 1st of April every year until the 1st of April of the next year.

I have no desire whatever to protect any coal profiteer in Detroit, Mich., or Philadelphia, Pa., who may go to these coal operators and purchase a certain number of cars of coal and hold it there with a view of profiting by a rising market. I do, however, want to protect these business men who are in the business of producing coal, and who have made legitimate contracts for the delivery of their coal, though they may realize perfectly, as I do, that under the priority authority given to the Interstate Commerce Commission under the Esch-Cummins Act the flow of their product may be interfered with to some extent in order that homes may be kept warm, in order that our public utilities may be kept in operation, in order that our hospitals and other similar enterprises may be kept fully warm, in order that all those things may be accomplished; and no coal operator nor anyone else seeks to interfere with that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator, for information, what interpretation he places upon this bill. The Senator has just alluded to the fact that he did not want the operators, nor did the operators themselves desire, to breach contracts which they had made for the sale of their coal. As I understand the Senator, many of the operators make their contracts covering a long period of time, and make them in advance of the season's development. To put it in a concrete way, suppose that a contractor has sold his coal in advance for one year at $2 per ton, and under this bill the Interstate Commerce Commission shall rule that priority must be given to some other branch of industry, and his contractee be relegated to the last category in the list of priorities, so that the coal of the coal operator might not be delivered to this person who had bought it at $2 a ton: If Mr. Hoover shall say that $4 or $5 per ton is a reasonable price, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall so determine, will the coal operator be permitted to charge $4 or $5 a ton for it, instead of the $2 that he would have obtained if it had gone to the person with whom he had made the contract?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suppose that there may be coal operators who under those circumstances would welcome the interference of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the diversion of their product to some one who was willing to pay $4 or $5 a ton, under the maximum price to be set by the Interstate Commerce Commission, rather than to ship their coal to their customers to whom they had contracted it at $2 per ton.

Mr. KING. I am very much interested in knowing the effect of this bill, because, as I understand it now, the result will be that in many instances coal that has been contracted at $2 may be sold at $4 or $5 a ton, and the mine operator relieved perhaps not from some legal liability as to his contractee but relieved of the immediate duty of furnishing that coal to the contractee, and he will be permitted to charge $2 or $3 or $4 a ton more than he had contracted to receive.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; that is quite possible. That is entirely possible and very probable under the operation of this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that were possible, it would not be brought about by this bill, and that would not comport very accurately with the description which the Senator from West Virginia has just been giving of coal operators. I assume that coal operators are just as honest as other men, neither more honest nor less honest; and if a coal operator has agreed to deliver coal at $2 a ton, I assume that if he can get the cars with which to deliver it he will not violate his contract.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if he were permitted to continue to deliver to his customer, of course he would carry out his contract; but suppose that under the operation of this measure he were directed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to ship his coal to some one else, would he be obliged to ship that coal at the price at which he had sold it to his original customer, or would his coal go to the new destination at the price fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly he would not be obliged to ship his coal to some one with whom he has not contracted for the contract price; but that has nothing to do with the violation of the contract. This bill does not enable him to violate his contract.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It prevents him from carrying out his contract.

Mr. CUMMINS. It may prevent him from carrying out his contract—I mean the existing law. I am not speaking about the pending bill. The existing law authorizes the commission to create these classifications and to require coal for certain purposes to be first furnished. If among those purposes the contract coal does not fall, then that coal must be furnished at a fair and reasonable price; that is all, and that is right.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator, if the Senator from West Virginia will yield, if existing law permits the Interstate Commerce Commission to accomplish that end, what is the object of the pending bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I really do not want to go into the whole argument again. The purpose of the pending bill is to supply to the Interstate Commerce Commission an authority which it is believed by many people, and among those people the majority, I think, of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that the commission does not at present possess; namely, authority to classify preferences on account of unreasonable prices that may be charged. It can classify these preferences, taking into consideration the purposes for which the coal is to be used, the importance, the necessity for the coal, but it can not say to a railroad company: "You shall not furnish cars to an operator because that operator is exacting unreasonable prices for his coal."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from West Virginia will yield, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa practically the same question that I propounded to the Senator from West Virginia as to the effect of this bill; and may I premise the statement by this observation, with the facts of which the Senator is familiar:

Many of these bituminous coal operators, as the Senator knows, contract in advance with large corporations. For instance, in my State they contract with the smelters, with the sugar factories, with corporations that would be put far down the list in establishing priorities. Perhaps those corporations consume the greater part of the coal. If it should develop that coal is required in excess of that which will be available for domestic use and for public utilities, so that a portion of the coal contracted to the corporations of which I have been speaking would be required, would not the effect be that the coal operators would be compelled, upon the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to breach their contracts with these corporations to whom they had contracted to furnish large quantities of coal at, say, $2 a ton or $1.75 a ton, and hold that coal available for domestic or other purposes—purposes classified in a higher list of priorities—and at prices that might be double the prices at which they had contracted to sell to these corporations?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so; but, if it were so, it would be all the better for the country, because these public utilities must have coal. They have no contract with the coal operators. The Senator from Utah is assuming that, I take it. They must buy their coal at the current price, and if the coal operator or the coal dealer has no restriction upon him, if he has coal to sell, he will charge, naturally, all that the market will bear; and this bill is intended to require, through this process that has been described many times, the sale of that coal at a reasonable price. It does not compel the operator to sell coal to anybody at any price. It does not interfere with any contract which the operator may have to sell coal or deliver coal, except in so far as the superior necessity of some community or some institutions or some purposes will lead the Interstate Commerce Commission to say that the railroads must use their facilities for furnishing these communities and these people and these purposes first.

It can not by any possibility increase the price of coal to the people who have no contracts for coal. On the contrary, I think it will very much diminish the price of coal. That is, it will be a restriction upon the coal operator.

I am not one of the people, I am sure, to whom the Senator from West Virginia referred when he remarked that we were disposed to vilify the coal operators.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not heard the Senator do that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The coal operator, so far as I know him, is the ordinary business citizen of the United States, and he has all the qualities that business men generally possess. He will sell at the highest price that he believes for his own interest.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just as every other business man does.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just as every other man who has anything to sell will sell at the highest price that he can get, considering the future, of course. He may not regard it for his own interest to sell at the very highest price he can get at a given time; but that will not be out of consideration for the public, but it will be because he does not believe it good policy to do so. We have had to restrict many of these people. We are doing it all the while. We are restricting the railroad companies. The municipalities are restricting electric-light companies and gas companies and water companies. All these institutions are composed of and are managed by men of honesty, as we understand that word; but we have found that the inevitable inclination and the uncontrollable impulse of human nature is to secure the largest possible profit in any transaction which the person who is controlling the situation believes to be for his own interest. It is in that sense, and that sense only, that I have spoken of the coal operator. I think he is just as good as anybody else, and no better than ordinary people. He will yield to this temptation—and no one can blame him for yielding to the temptation—unless, as I remarked the other day, he is protected against the temptation by the restrictions which we propose to put upon him in this law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator that the only other industry which is comparable with this one in the action now suggested to be taken is the transportation industry, and there is quite a marked difference in the treatment of these two great industries. Under the bill relating to the regulation of our transportation system, which bears the name of the distinguished Senator from Iowa, there is a guaranty given to the railroads of a certain minimum profit. There is no such guaranty given to the coal operators under this bill of a minimum profit, or any profit at all, and yet, if, in the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the operation of this bill, any man in the industry is selling his coal at what it regards as an unjust or unreasonable price, though he may be only getting back what money he has actually lost in the operation of his mines, he has no recourse at all; he is shut off from his supply of cars and is obliged to take what is offered him.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia is very much mistaken with regard to the transportation act. There is no guaranty of any kind in the transportation act. There is a rule of rate making, which is simply the rule which the Supreme Court has laid down over and over again.

The fact that there is no guaranty, and can be no guaranty, is evidenced by this situation, that in the first year of the operation of the transportation act the railroad companies made no profit whatever. During the whole time since the transportation act was passed the railway net operating income has been less than 3 per cent. There is prevalent a very general misapprehension with regard to that matter.

I was not instituting a parallel between a coal operator and a railroad operator or the municipal utility operator. If they were under strict control they would charge whatever they could get for the service which they rendered, and it is for that reason, and because they exercise a monopoly, or something in the nature of a monopoly, that Congress and the States have found it necessary to put a limitation upon their charges for service.

I hope that the day will be long coming when we shall be obliged to take the coal mines of the country and establish the same relation between them and the Government that we have established between the Government and the railroads, or which the States have established between themselves and the public utility companies, such as I have mentioned. But there is only one way in which that can be avoided, and that is that competition, which is the natural force in business, and which is the only force which ordinarily limits prices to a fair and reasonable level, will be so persuasive and controlling in the coal business that we will never have occasion to call upon the power of the Government to establish prices.

Just now we know that competition is not performing its ordinary functions. It can not perform them because of the situation existing with regard to transportation. That is the whole basis for this temporary measure, the power under which, as I remarked a long time ago, is to be invoked only at rare intervals. I hope it may never be invoked again, but just now it seems to be, from my standpoint, absolutely necessary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I would not attempt at all to try to tell the Senator from Iowa what is in the transportation act; but I have the same impression which he says is quite general, that there is a provision in the law which permits the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant rates which, taken in connection with the wages allowed by the Labor Board, will allow a certain percentage upon the return.

Mr. CUMMINS. The law now provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall make rates which will yield a fair return upon the value of the property which renders the service.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Under the operation of this bill there is no provision whatever which would allow the coal operator whose coal might be forced down below the actual cost of production any return whatever upon his capital investment.

One of the things which reconciles me to the perhaps inevitable passage of this bill is that, while in my judgment it does not reach the seat of the trouble at all, the impossibility of its execution in a fair and practical manner will be so fully demonstrated, as it was during the operation of a similar law relating to the railroads, even in war time, that the country will be fully persuaded that it will have nothing of Government operation of mines, just as the Government operation of railroads during the last administration fully persuaded the country, and many of those who earnestly advocated that measure, that it wanted none of Government ownership or operation of the railroad systems of this country.

I believe this experiment which the Senator is seeking to have tried will fully convince the country that it wants no interference of this kind with the ordinary operations of business. It is absurd to claim that a few men in one of the departments can run the railroads better than the railroad organizations themselves can run them, subject to reasonable regulations with reference to rates, and so forth, or that they can run the mines better than those who have been in the mine business a lifetime and know all the intricacies of the business.

The difficulty in the transportation question must be settled, because whenever there has failed to be a condition of free competition, just referred to by the Senator from Iowa, it has invariably been through the failure of our transportation systems. I know that high operating officials at this minute indicate that if the Interstate Commerce Commission would let them work out this car distribution matter, they could do it much more efficiently and to the better satisfaction of everybody, and more in the interest of the country, than is now being done under the orders issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Of course, that is a matter of opinion. These men tell me that is the case, and I personally know they make the statement that instead of the operation of the railroads under these orders being furthered, they are being hampered and very seriously hampered. Until the real seat of the trouble is reached and the transportation difficulty solved, it will not be possible to greatly increase the amount of coal which should flow uninterruptedly now from the producers to the consumers of that article.

To show how acute that situation is, I want to call attention to facts brought out by the last report of the American Railway Association, which show, for the first week of August, 1922, a total of 852,580 revenue cars of freight handled by the railroads of the United States.

The same report shows that in 1920, when the country was booming, for the same week in August, 971,269 cars were loaded.

For the week ending August 5, the figures show there were 851,351 cars, in 1922, as compared with 935,730 cars of revenue freight in 1920.

In other words, the railroads are now handling about 90 per cent as much freight as they were moving in the boom days of August, 1920.

Let us compare the amount of coal and coke. Out of these 852,580 cars of freight loaded during the week ended Saturday, August 12, 1922, there was a total of 92,979 cars of coal and coke, as compared with 235,777 cars of coal and coke for the same week in August, 1920. Subtracting these coal and coke loadings from the total of all cars loaded, we find that in the week of August 12, 1922, 759,601 cars of freight, other than coal, were loaded on the railways, while in 1920 only 735,492 cars of freight other than coal and coke were loaded.

Thus, in spite of the partial stoppage of our transportation system by reason of the pending strike, the railroads are now handling more freight, other than coal and coke, than they were handling in 1920, and they are handling approximately 90 per cent of the total volume of traffic they were then handling. In other words, while there has been a reduction of 142,000 cars of coal and coke a week, yet the total tonnage hauled by the railroads at this time is 90 per cent of the total tonnage hauled per week in the same period of 1920. Under those conditions it must be clear to any reasonable person that the roads can not continue to handle this enormous volume of other freight and expect to handle the 250,000 cars of coal and coke per week which they ought now to be handling. If they can not handle more than 850,000 cars of all kinds of freight per week, then the obvious thing to do, of course, is to curtail the movement of some of the other freight and devote that service to the task of moving coal and coke.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ERNST in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission, for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CUMMINS. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 12472.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributer, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It will be seen, therefore, from the figures given that the Interstate Commerce Commission has before it a gigantic task. It would have a superhuman task if the transportation systems of the country were now in normal condition and able to carry a normal amount of freight, whereas we know that the entire organization of the operating departments of the railroads are very much upset. Their motive power is in very bad condition and has been growing steadily worse instead of better. If the pending railroad strike was settled to-day it would be six or eight months probably before the transportation systems of the country could resume their normal functioning with reference to the transportation of freight and passengers and keep up the equipment that is in operation and repair the equipment that is in need of repair.

For that reason it seems to me that the pending bill is not an essential measure at all. It does not go to the root of the trouble. It simply adds a very doubtful expedient giving a power to the Interstate Commerce Commission which will undoubtedly be contested in the courts and in my judgment found to be unconstitutional. While my opinion on that subject could be entirely disregarded, yet it is likewise the opinion of profound lawyers, thoroughly versed in the subject, that it is unconstitutional. The element which is now added to the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission—and that is the sole excuse for the passage of the bill—is that it enables the Interstate Commerce Commission or its agencies to inquire into the question of prices at which coal is being sold in interstate commerce; and if in the judgment of some minor officer—because in the administration of these laws we generally find the power and authority delegated from one to another until it is finally found reposing in the hands of some very minor officer with whom the public has to deal with reference to the subject—if such minor officer or if the Interstate Commerce Commission itself in its judgment, with the information which it is able to gather in the short time it will have, shall deem the prices unreasonably high, then they shall issue orders as provided in the bill. In spite of the fact that the Senator from Iowa says they already have the information, they can not have all the information which they will need to have in order to pass intelligently upon the great variety of subjects which will enter into the question we have before us. That is the only thing that is added to the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that of inquiring into the prices at which the fuel is to be sold.

While the Senator from Minnesota made the point that some few people in our cities, coal scalpers, are inclined to speculate in coal—and if they do I have no sympathy with them or any desire whatever to protect them—I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota and of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that the public-service corporations, which they have freely mentioned as being within the scope of their intention to protect, are and have been speculating in coal. They had an opportunity which was taken advantage of by a very large majority of the public-service corporations needing large quantities of coal. Knowing that they would need so much coal every week of every month and every day of every year, if they have been at all wise, they have provided by contracts prior to the 1st day of April for their fuel needs. Some of the middlemen handling coal in our cities will buy coal sometimes, and sometimes they lose and sometimes they profit by it. They speculate in coal just as men speculate in wheat or cotton or in any other commodity that is handled by business men anywhere. Yet at the same time these very public-service corporations, if they have not provided for their needs in fuel, have not done so because they chose to take their chances with the spot coal market during the remainder of the year. It is nothing but speculation, and the purpose of the bill is to protect them from the consequences of their folly, a species of paternalism which we have not often been called upon in time of peace, if ever, to exercise.

Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate. There are a great many things one might say upon the subject, but I do not know that it would greatly interest the Senate or change any votes upon the subject. I apprehend that the bill is to pass, but I want to say that I believe it is a departure from the fundamental principles of the Government upon which we should be loathe to embark. It is putting Government in business to an extent which, I think, is a very serious mistake. There might possibly be instances where hardship would follow. I think there will be instances where hardship will follow in spite of the bill. I do not think the bill attempts or is thought to prevent that, because it is admitted that the Interstate Commerce Commission already has ample power to protect the public so far as it can do so with the available amount of fuel that it will have at its disposal.

I think the bill proceeds upon a wrong principle and I have only wanted to voice my protest against its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill is now in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now in the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. The amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, has not been concurred in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not. The Senator from Utah has offered an amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. The first question is whether the amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, shall be concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Iowa that I have no objection to concurrence in the amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, provided it does not cut off the tendering of the amendment which I have just sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 11. That during such emergency and for the period of one year from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, either in his individual capacity or as an officer, agent, or employee of a corporation, or member of a partnership, to buy, sell, acquire, handle, or hold, or to contract to buy, sell, acquire, handle, or hold, any coal shipped in commerce among the several States or foreign nations or in the Territories or other possessions of the United States, when the purpose of such person in so doing is to affect, whether temporarily or otherwise, the market price of such coal by diverting any shipment of such coal from its regular and normal movement to the consumers' market and limiting the supply of such coal on such market. Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this section or who knowingly engages in any operation, practice, or transaction prohibited by this section, or who willfully aids or abets any such violation or any such prohibited operation, practice, or transaction, shall on conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it may be that the amendment which I have just offered is not germane to the bill under consideration. However, the Senate pays but little attention to the question of pertinency or germaneness in dealing with legislation. Bills dealing with a specific matter are frequently amended so as to deal with an entirely different subject; and often, upon appropriation bills, there are grafted provisions of vital and far-reaching character. Penal statutes and substantive law frequently are found in appropriation bills.

I do not mean to express approval of this method of legislation; indeed, it is obnoxious in many ways. However, there are ample precedents for the amendment which I have sent to the desk. I do not want to interfere with the consideration of the bill reported by the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], though I am compelled to say that I do not believe it will accomplish the good claimed for it by him and by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. Indeed, if we are to accept the statements of a number of Senators who have discussed the bill there will be some evils and injustices resulting from it, and its passage will justify serious apprehension as to its wisdom or efficacy.

That legislation dealing with the coal situation is needed, perhaps, most Senators will concede. There will be, however, a contrariety of views as to the character of legislation which the situation either justifies or demands. It is a serious matter to interfere with the laws of supply and demand and the operation of the laws of trade and commerce. That evils frequently arise in the economic world and in trade and commerce, none can deny. Greedy and selfish persons and conscienceless profiteers are found in all lines of business and in all trades and professions. Human nature is much the same now as it has been in the past, and cupidity and avarice find representatives in trade and commerce and in substantially all business activities. There always have been those who sought to interrupt natural economic laws and to take advantage of conditions which obstacles interposed by them have created.

Men have sought to "corner" the necessities of life and to rob the victims of their rascality. History is replete with examples of the criminal conspiracies of persons who sought to control the necessities of life. Food supplies, clothing, fuel—these have always been the subjects which cruel and rapacious persons have sought to control in order to obtain unconscionable profits. Because of the evils which have resulted from these acts the people have frequently demanded that governments step in and assume control over matters of trade and commerce, and particularly over those articles which are indispensable to the happiness and welfare of the people.

I do not think that conditions to-day differ in principle from those which we read of in countless volumes. I think it is generally conceded that the results of governmental interference in the matters referred to have failed to produce beneficial results. Of course, there are situations which require the assertion of governmental authority; but, generally speaking, attempts by the Government to regulate prices or to fix prices or to provide rules and regulations with respect to the business transactions between individuals, or to impair contracts or interfere with the contractual relations of individuals have worked more harm than good. The common law, which affords us many valuable precedents, dealt with engrossing, regrating, and forestalling, and punished those who sought to interfere with the natural and orderly processes by which commodities, and particularly food commodities and products, passed from th producer to the consumer. The American people, trained in the school of liberty and independence, and owing their progress and development and prosperity to the freedom of trade and commerce which they have enjoyed, view with great concern the adoption of policies which project the Federal Government into the private affairs and into the business activities and concerns of the people.

The States, reflecting the views of the people, have not asserted paternalistic control over the business affairs of the people. They have enacted statutes punishing conspiracies to restrain trade or monopolies or efforts to thwart and destroy competition. They have preferred that business be left unfettered and that the individual have a free field within which to develop and expand and produce and make contribution to the wealth and advancement of his community and his State.

The Federal Government, exercising its authority under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, has passed various statutes dealing with interstate commerce, and has sought through the Sherman antitrust law to prevent monopolies and conspiracies to destroy competition. Great powers have been committed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the bill before us seeks to expand the authority of that Federal agency.

The situation may justify this bill, but undoubtedly its provisions may be so perverted or construed as to injure and operate oppressively. It is conceded that it may have the effect of interfering with existing contracts, and of permitting coal operators to sell coal which they have contracted to deliver, at higher prices and to other individuals and corporations than those with whom they have contracted. I concede that a situation may develop justifying priorities, indeed requiring priorities, in the shipment of coal, and justifying a coercive policy which will result in supplying coal for domestic uses and by public service corporations at the expense of industries not indispensable to the life of the people.

The situation may be so serious as to justify a bill of this character. I have not had time to make full investigation as to the facts upon which this bill is founded, but I assume that the committee reporting it believe that the condition is so critical as to call for legislation of this drastic character.

While there are features of the bill that are to me exceedingly obnoxious, I shall not oppose it. I regret, however, that the administration has been unable to offer a measure that has greater promise of benefit and relief. This bill is a rather pitiful exhibition of Republican statesmanship and is no flattering testimonial of which a party might be proud, of its ability and competency to deal with great public or national questions.

Mr. President, I do not desire to be partisan or to engage in a partisan discussion, but I can not refrain from observing that the party in power has utterly failed to meet industrial and political conditions in the United States or to inaugurate or execute policies conducive to the public welfare or to the prosperity of the American people.

It has blundered and failed to as great an extent in its domestic policies as it has in its foreign policies. It has brought the country to the verge of industrial chaos, and it has not only failed to aid in the rehabilitation of other nations, but it has contributed to the grave and tragic situation in which Europe and her people find themselves. The executive branch of the Government and the Republican majority in Congress since the Republicans have come into power have shown vacillation and an utter inability to grasp the significance of domestic or world conditions or to provide adequate measures to promote the welfare and prosperity of the people.

Mr. President, the amendment which I have submitted is not intended to deal with the entire coal situation. It is in harmony, as I have suggested, with common-law remedies, and has a proper relation to Federal statutes heretofore enacted, such as the Sherman antitrust law and the Clayton Act. Undoubtedly Congress has the authority to enact a law containing the provisions found in this amendment. The amendment purports to deal with interstate transactions, and in my opinion may be supported under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution.

I have referred to the fact that at common law forestalling was an offense. It interfered with the orderly movement of commodities from the producer to the consumer. The speculator and the purchaser who desired to hold commodities for a rise in prices was subject to the pains and penalties of the law. Speculation in foodstuffs and in commodities was interdicted. We have been advised that after the war, when the prices of sugar and coal reached very high levels, that speculators were largely, if not wholly, responsible therefor. It is known that individuals and corporations who had not theretofore dealt in sugar or coal or other products suddenly became active in their purchase and sale. Men who had never dealt in coal bought thousands of tons without ever seeing it and with no intention of using it and having no necessity for its use.

They were speculators, profiteers, and greedy, conscienceless offenders against moral law and the laws of society, if not against criminal statutes.

I have been told of many individuals who made enormous profits in their speculations in sugar and in coal. Individuals would buy coal which was in storage or in cars and pay storage charges or demurrage in order to prevent the coal from reaching the consuming public. They actively contributed to the movement which forced higher prices and thus became conspirators in exploiting the people. Speculators of this character ought to be punished, and if statutes are not sufficiently broad to punish them, the States and the Federal Government should promptly enact laws that will send them to the penitentiary. They are worse than highway robbers; they take advantage of the necessities of the people and profit by their sufferings.

Many persons of whom I have spoken would make fictitious sales in order to advance prices and to increase their illegal gains and profits. Their course was cowardly, cruel, wicked, and criminal. I am told that there are persons now speculating in coal and forcing the prices to higher levels by somewhat the same plan as that adopted following the war and to which I have just referred.

The situation is such as to perhaps warrant the Federal Government passing a penal statute of the character indicated in my amendment. Briefly, this amendment means that persons or corporations can not speculate in coal. They can not interrupt the orderly processes by which the coal passes from the producer to the ultimate consumer. It punishes those who buy coal to hold for sale at higher prices. In other words, it seeks to prevent all forms of speculation in this commodity so important to the welfare of the people. It is not intended to interfere with wholesale or retail dealers or with legitimate transactions which are essential to the transfer of the coal from the producer to the consumer. This amendment if enacted into law would not interfere with all proper agencies essential as conduits to pass the coal from the mine to the consumer. The important part of the amendment provides that it is an offense to—buy, sell, acquire, handle, or hold, or to contract to buy, sell, acquire, handle, or hold any coal shipped in commerce among the several States or foreign nations or in the Territories or other possessions of the United States, when the purpose of such person in so doing is to affect, whether temporarily or otherwise, the market price of such coal by diverting any shipment of such coal from its regular and normal movement to the consumers' market, and limiting the supply of such coal on such market.

Senators will observe that it is made an offense for individuals to deal in coal when the purpose is to affect the market price by diverting any shipment from its regular and normal movement to the consumers' market and where the effect would be to limit the supply of such coal on the market. Speculators, for the purpose of affecting, temporarily at least, the market price of coal under speculating transactions divert the coal from its regular and normal movement, and to that extent the supply in the market is limited. It may be that the limitation is for a brief period only, but nevertheless any speculative transaction interferes with the natural law of supply and demand and the regular and orderly processes which are brought into play in the transfer of the coal from the mine operator to the consumer, and to prevent this is the object of my amendment.

Mr. President, during the war I suggested a plan which I believe would have proven effective in dealing with profiteering and speculation in commodities. I suggested that the States enact laws under which some State agency would be empowered to commandeer all products and commodities which were controlled by speculators, monopolists, and conspirators who sought to rob and exploit the people, paying therefor a reasonable price. The plan also contemplated that the State agent would then sell the commandeered commodities to the people at reasonable prices. It is obvious that under such a law corporations or individuals would be afraid to unduly increase prices for fear that the State authority would be exercised, and the commodities, the prices of which they were seeking to unduly elevate, commandeered. A person will not speculate in commodities which the State may immediately seize and sell for reasonable prices. I suggested that the bills could provide that the States, upon commandeering the commodities, should tender what was regarded as a reasonable price, and if the person owning the property refused to accept the same, then 75 per cent of the agreed reasonable value should be tendered and the owner remitted to an action at law to recover what he regarded as proper.

At the same time I also suggested that the Federal Government, as a war measure, might enact a law authorizing an appropriate Federal agency to commandeer commodities whenever there was monopolistic control resulting in unreasonable prices or whenever the prices charged were unreasonable or oppressive. I further suggested that the Federal agency commandeering the property be authorized to sell the same to the public for reasonable prices.

I repeat that a measure of that kind would have gone to the root of profiteering. Those who robbed and exploited the people would have hesitated to embark upon their nefarious course if there had been a law hanging over their heads under which the Federal Government, whenever their prices were too high, could have seized the property and sold it to the public at reasonable prices.

My suggestion took into account the constitutional provision requiring the payment of due compensation for property taken for a public use. I am not recommending such legislation at this time, but undoubtedly the States have power to enact such legislation, and a crisis may arise which may warrant the exercise of such power by the Federal Government. That question, however, Mr. President, is academic, and I shall not further discuss it.

Mr. President, a number of Senators, while expressing approval of the general purpose of my amendment, have urged me not to press it at this time for fear that it may delay the passage of the pending bill, either in the Senate or in the House. I have reluctantly reached the conclusion to not press my amendment at this time. I shall immediately, however, offer it in the form of a bill and ask its reference to the appropriate committee. I have received some assurances that it will be promptly considered. With this understanding I shall not press my amendment, but I give notice that if the committee to which the amendment in the form of a bill is referred fails to act upon it promptly, I shall offer it as an amendment to some other bill which will be presented to the Senate for consideration before adjournment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, whatever may be the merit or the demerit of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, it is quite obvious that it ought not to become a part of the pending bill. It relates to a different subject. Its effect would be nothing else than either greatly to delay or entirely to defeat the passage of the pending bill; and, inasmuch as the emergency, from my standpoint, is very great and we are losing every day the opportunity to protect the people of the country from onerous exactions, I sincerely hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

So far as the suggestion that there be immediate consideration of the bill, if it is introduced as an independent measure, is concerned, all I can say is that if it shall be referred to the committee of which I am chairman it shall have all the consideration that the committee can give it. I would not promise, however, that it could be considered and a report made upon it at this session, for the Senator from Utah knows that very soon we shall have to cease work for this session.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether, in his judgment, the Interstate Commerce Committee would deal with this bill? Technically, I think it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CUMMINS. Ordinarily, I think bills which simply impose penalties and define crimes ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary rather than to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. KING. I shall now content myself by asking that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The chairman is present, and I direct his attention to the bill and request that at the earliest possible date the committee be convened for the purpose of considering this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah having withdrawn his amendment, the question now is on concurring in the amendment to the pending bill which was made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] submitted and had printed an amendment to the pending bill, which he announced he would offer at the proper time. Before the matter was in shape for the Senator to present his amendment, however, he was called from the city, and he requested me to present the amendment to the Senate.

A few days ago, in my absence, the matter came up, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] very kindly presented the amendment, and a vote was taken upon the amendment with a very slim attendance of the Senate, as I understand, and it was rejected. I feel it my duty, under the circumstances, to offer the amendment now to the bill in the Senate. I recall that when the Senator from Missouri offered his amendment and very fully discussed it, the Senator from Iowa [Mr.

CUMMINS], in charge of this bill, indicated that he had no opposition to the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, not quite that. I agreed with the proposals contained in the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I said. I said "the purpose of the amendment."

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not agree, or even suggest, that it ought to be put upon this bill as an amendment. It belongs as an amendment to the bill under the charge of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] if it should be added to any bill as an amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator misunderstood me. I did not state that he expressed a willingness to accept the amendment to this bill, but that he did say that he had no objection to the purposes of the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is entirely correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I said at first. The Senator probably did not understand me.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I stated to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] before he left that I had no objection to the purpose or object of his amendment, but that I should object to its going on a bill which is solely for the purpose of creating a commission. If you will look at the amendment, you will see that it has no part or parcel with the object or purposes of the measure which I have in hand. I think it is a very good thing to do; but my bill simply creates a commission for the purpose of investigating certain matters touching the coal industry. It is not in the way of permanent legislation, nor imposing by law any obligation upon the operators or anybody else connected with the coal industry until such time as the commission shall report, and we shall enact a law in accordance with the suggestions of the commission. I stated that to the Senator from Missouri before he left. He did not express himself after I had expressed myself, so I am not authorized to state that he accepted my view.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the amendment as printed purports to be an amendment to be offered to House bill 12377. The Senator from Missouri, before he left, so changed it as to make it an amendment to the pending bill, Senate bill 3940. Now I understand that the Senator from Iowa thinks it is not appropriate as an amendment to the present bill, and now I understand the Senator from Idaho to say that it would not be appropriate as an amendment to the bill that he has in charge.

Mr. BORAH. I really think that both the Senator from Iowa and I are correct. I do not think that the legislation which is there proposed is, I might say, germane—although, technically speaking, that never obtains in the Senate—I do not think it really belongs to either one of these measures. This bill is purely an emergency proposition, and mine is purely for an investigation. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri undertakes to create an obligation upon the operators, which will be permanent law, to have them report every so often concerning their profits, the amount of coal which they have sold, and so forth. That may be perfectly proper when we come to legislate permanently upon this question. I have no objection to it if it is offered as a separate bill now, although I think it might well wait until we come to the matter of permanent legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. It seems to me that this amendment would be very appropriately attached to a bill which raises a commission, because the amendment proposes that the operators of the coal mines shall make bimonthly reports embodying some information that would be exceedingly helpful, I should say, to the commission which it is proposed to create.

Mr. BORAH. That is true, Mr. President; but no man investigating as a member of this commission would accept one of those reports as conclusive.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; not as conclusive.

Mr. BORAH. And he would have to investigate the same subject matter anyway.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will have to admit, I think, that if a report of this sort were required from the operators of the coal mines, while it would not be conclusive upon the commission, and while they probably would desire to make additional investigations, it would be exceedingly helpful to the commission, especially if that report is required to be made under oath. This amendment does require that the statement of the operators shall be made under oath, and it is a very sweeping statement, one that would seem to get at the very vitals of their business operations.

The amendment provides for a sworn statement from the operators showing the following facts:

First. The amount of coal by them produced for the 15 days preceding the issuance of said statement.

Second. The price per ton for the various grades received by them at the mine.

Third. The amount of such coal shipped direct to retail distributors and the amount to the wholesale dealers and the amount sold directly to consumers, together with the prices in each instance received.

Fourth. The percentage the production bears to the capacity production of the mine as rated by the carriers serving the mine.

Fifth. The causes for failure to operate the mine at full production capacity and the percentage of reduction due to each of the several causes assigned.

I can not conceive of any information that a commission such as the Senator from Idaho proposes to raise by this bill would find more valuable than the information sought to be elicited by this amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I had intended merely to take a perfunctory vote now upon whether this amendment shall be adopted as an amendment to the pending bill, and later, if it was rejected—and I rather assume it will be, in view of the statement now made by the Senator from Iowa—offer it as an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Idaho, to which bill I think it would probably be somewhat more germane—in fact, altogether more germane, in my opinion—than it is to this bill; and I am disappointed to hear the Senator from Idaho indicate that he might not be willing to accept it. However that may be, I am going to ask for a vote now, and I will say to the Senator from Idaho that when his bill is taken up I shall offer it, and I hope he will change his mind about it.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps it will be accepted on this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope it will be. The Senator indicated that he would accept it, I thought, a little while ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as I said to the Senator from Missouri, there are no provisions in the proposed amendment with which I do not agree. It proposes a system of regulating the production and the distribution of coal; but, as I remarked to the Senator from Missouri, this bill expires by its own limitation in six months.

Mr. SIMMONS. I appreciate that.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would be of no value at all to attach this amendment to it, and really I think it ought to be made the subject of an independent bill, because it does constitute a system of regulation.

Mr. SMITH. Let us take a vote on it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only say that I can not accept it, or advise Senators to vote for it as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean to say that if this provision is added as an amendment to his bill, it would not be operative after six months?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is just what I mean to say. The bill before us has been amended so as to make it expire in six months from the day of its passage.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has fixed six months because he thinks probably this emergency will last that long?

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. SIMMONS. The information that is sought here is largely to help in dealing with this emergency.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. This information will be exceedingly valuable, it seems to me, in this emergency.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to discuss the matter. In fact, I am not sufficiently acquainted with the purposes of the Senator offering the amendment to discuss it satisfactorily to myself. Senators will remember, however, the very forceful and able presentation made by the Senator from Missouri at the time he offered this amendment.

I agree, as I stated a little while ago, that this amendment is clearly more germane to the bill which will hereafter be under consideration, introduced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], to raise a commission of a permanent character to deal with the coal situation, than it is to this bill; but I do believe that the amendment would be helpful in carrying out the purposes of both of these measures. The fuel distributor provided for in this bill, the powers that are to be exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with the pending bill, are of such a character that it seems to me if they could have these bi-monthly reports from the operators, disclosing these fundamental and vital facts with reference to their operation, production, and prices, it would be very helpful; in the one case helpful only during an emergency, but the bill is being passed to serve an emergency; and I think this amendment would help the agencies of the Government that are intrusted with the power of executing the duties imposed under the bill.

I simply wish to ask for a vote, and I wish to say now that if the amendment is defeated, I shall offer it to the bill of Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and then I shall press it with some degree of vigor, because in the meantime I shall more fully advise myself with reference to the matter.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from West Virginia is not in the Chamber. I listened to his address a few moments ago, and noted the defense he made of the coal industry in his State.

As I understand it, it is not charged by the proponents of this bill that every man engaged in the coal business is corrupt, or endeavoring to raise prices unduly, or to do anything unlawful. In fact, I am sure we will all agree that the great majority of the men engaged in the business of mining or handling coal in any manner are honest men, just as honorable as any other class of men engaged in any industry. But they are human, and in the past the experience has been that in a time of shortage coal gets into the hands of speculators, and very often passes through a number of hands, and vast sums of money are made upon it.

I recall distinctly the facts brought out a few years ago, when a committee of the Senate, of which I was a member, made some inquiry into this subject. I remember a coal operator from West Virginia contended before our committee that he was disposing of his coal at something like $2.60 a ton at the mine, when at the same time he was a coal wholesaler in Philadelphia selling soft coal at the mine—though not at the mine of this operator, it is true—for $11 a ton to the Department of War. I know our committee took the trouble to follow that coal right down from the mine to the consumer, and discovered that in some cases the coal passed through seven or eight different hands before it finally reached the War Department.

So, because of that knowledge, because of the experience of the past, it seems to me this legislation is wise.

In my own State we have recently passed a law much more drastic than this. Our governor, who has been a member of our court of appeals, and who is perhaps one of the most learned lawyers of the Nation, after a careful examination of the subject feels confident that this very drastic coal control law of ours, which seeks to prevent profiteering in coal within our State, will stand the test of the courts.

In New York we passed a law regulating rents because of the emergency, and it has gone through our supreme court and court of appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, where in two different cases the courts have decided that the law is constitutional. I am just as sure that when this bill is passed and reaches the Supreme Court, which it undoubtedly will, following the line of decisions in the rent act, the higher court will uphold the constitutionality of this measure.

In New York last week we appropriated $10,000,000 to be used as a revolving fund wherever necessary to assure a reasonable price of coal to the consumer. The State will take charge of this matter itself and thereby assure fair dealing in all coal that comes into our State.

I shall vote for the pending bill. It does not go too far for me, although usually I deplore legislation of this character. But we are in a great emergency, and we must not stand helpless and fail to protect the people of the country in this emergency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. DIAL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the principal legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and not knowing how he would vote on this question, I refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], with whom I have a general pair, was called to one of the departments on official business, and is therefore temporarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea" on the passage of the bill. I vote "yea."

Mr. BORAH. I am not at liberty at this time to cast my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]; and

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The roll call resulted—yeas 40, nays 7, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas are 40, the nays are 7, and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] are present, not voting. The bill is passed.

The bill as passed is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That by reason of prolonged interruption in the operation of a substantial part of the coal-mining industry in the United States and of impairment in the service of certain common carriers within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission and engaged in commerce among the States, a national emergency exists which threatens to obstruct and hamper the operation of the Government of the United States and of its several departments, the transportation of the mails, the operation of carriers engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign countries, and to furnish an opportunity for the disposition of coal and other fuel at unreasonably high prices.

SEC. 2. That the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved Fruary 4, 1887, as amended, including the transportation act, 1920, and especially under section 402 of said transportation act, 1920, are, during the aforesaid emergency, enlarged to include the authority to issue in interstate transportation of coal or other fuel orders for priorities, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier, including vessels suitable for transportation of coal on the inland waters of the United States which for such purpose shall be subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, or region, or person, or corporation, and to take any other necessary and appropriate steps for the priority in transportation and for the equitable distribution of coal or other fuel so as best to meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and to prevent upon the part of any person, partnership, association, or corporation the purchase or sale of coal or other fuel at prices unjustly or unreasonably high.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of assisting in carrying into effect the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission made under existing law or under section 2 hereof there is hereby created and established an agency of the United States to be known as "the Federal fuel distribution," and there shall be appointed by the President a Federal fuel distributor, who shall ascertain:

(a) Whether there exists within the United States or any part thereof a shortage of coal or other fuel and the extent of such shortage;

(b) The fields of production of coal and other fuel and the principal markets to which such production is usually transported and distributed and the means and methods of distribution thereat;

(c) The prices normally and usually charged for such coal and other fuel and whether current prices, considering the costs of production and distribution, with fair profits, are just and reasonable; and

(d) The nature and location of the consumers, whether persons, firms, corporations, municipalities, or communities, which should receive priority in transportation and distribution under the acts to regulate commerce administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission, including the transportation act, 1920, in time of shortage of coal or other fuel, or the transportation thereof, to the end that an equitable distribution of coal or other fuel may be secured so as best to meet the emergency and serve the public interest.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to receive and consider the recommendation of the Federal fuel distributor, based upon his reports upon the foregoing subjects, and any other information which it may secure in any manner authorized by law.

SEC. 4. That the Federal fuel distributor may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the powers conferred upon him under the provisions of this act, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, district, or possession, or department agency or political subdivision thereof, or any person or persons, and may avail himself of the advice and assistance of any department, commission, or board of the Government, and may appoint or create any agent or agency to facilitate the power and authority hereby conferred; and he shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees not in conflict with existing laws, and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephones, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other operating expenses as shall be necessary for the due and effective administration of this act.

SEC. 5. That whenever the President shall be of the opinion that the national emergency hereby declared has passed he shall by proclamation declare the same, and thereupon this act shall no longer be in force or effect, and in no event shall it continue in force and effect for longer than six months from the passage thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as changing or amending the present law as to assigning cars for handling or transporting coal on contracts entered into prior to July 25, 1922, at not more than $2 per ton f. o. b. cars at mines.

SEC. 6. That for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, including personal services and every other expense incident to the enforcement thereof, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, and request a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. KELLOGG, and Mr. SMITH conferees on the part of the Senate.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the unfinished business, House bill 12377, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission, for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 22, page 6, of the committee substitute as printed, after the words "United States," insert "or any person in any wise interested as mine owner, operator, or miner in the coal industry."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the matter again, but to state in a sentence or two what it is. When the bill was originally drawn it was provided that there should be a representative of the mine owners and a representative of labor upon the commission. The committee deemed it wise to eliminate that provision and leave the matter entirely to the Executive. That is the way the bill now stands. I very much desire to have the bill go through that way. I do not think it is wise to prohibit the right of the President to have these different interests represented on the commission if he sees fit. The more I think about it the more I believe they ought to be represented. Nevertheless, I have waived my view upon that in the interest of harmony and progress, but I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will not be adopted, because it would undertake to prevent the President from having those interests represented.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator, I think inadvertently, stated that there was no provision as to excluding anyone from the commission.

Mr. BORAH. I said no provision excluding representatives of the mine operators or the labor interests.

Mr. SHIELDS. I know it was an inadvertent statement.

Mr. BORAH. No; it was not inadvertent because that is true.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill as it stands excludes Members of Congress and members of the executive departments of the Government.

Mr. BORAH. I did not state that it did not prohibit anyone. I said it did not prohibit representatives of the mine owners or the workmen.

Mr. SHIELDS. I thought it might be inferred from the Senator's statement that it was without any reservation whatever. That is why I called it to the attention of the Senate.

I do not desire to argue the matter any further. The only comment I wish to make is that I thought Members of Congress and members of the executive departments were as competent to pass upon these matters as men interested in the coal industry, and certainly they were more disinterested as they have no financial interest. It was upon that theory and for that reason that I offered the amendment.

I ask that the entire provision may be read as it would read if my amendment were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. If amended, as proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, the paragraph would read:

That there is hereby created and established a commission to be known and designated as the United States coal commission, to be composed of five members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Members of the House of Representatives and United States Senate and any person holding an office under the United States, or any person in anywise interested, as mine owner, operator, or miner, in the coal industry to be ineligible to serve on said commission.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment which is now before the Senate relates only to the last provision, "or any person in anywise interested, as mine owner, operator, or miner, in the coal industry."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to offer an amendment. The amendment should appear upon page 8, after line 6, and is as follows:

Said commission shall make a separate investigation and report for the anthracite industry, which investigation and report shall cover all of the matters specified in the last preceding paragraph, and shall cover also every other phase of the anthracite industry, including the production, transportation, and distribution of anthracite, and the organized or other relationships, if any, among the mine operators or the mine workers, or among any persons engaged in the production, transportation, or distribution of coal.

I wish to say just a word in regard to the amendment. The amendment has been tendered as a result of the settlement of the anthracite controversy and was deemed by those interested in the matter—I mean those interested in having a complete investigation of it—to be more ample and make fuller provision for the investigation of that industry than the bill otherwise provided. I think the amendment is a good amendment. I feel that it would add to the bill and not detract from it in its efficiency. I should like to see it adopted.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may we have the amendment to the amendment read at the desk?

The Assistant Secretary read the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. On page 9, in line 8, I offer the following amendment: After the words "the President" insert a separate sentence to read as follows:

Said commission shall render its separate report on the anthracite industry on or about July 1, 1923, and shall endeavor, in said separate report and in the recommendations contained therein, regarding wages in the anthracite industry, to take into consideration the conditions obtaining up to the time when said report is made.

Mr. STERLING. Should not the Senator say "on or before July 1, 1923"?

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I think that would be better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho modifies his amendment to read "on or before July 1, 1923." The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. On page 9, line 8, before the word "data," I move to amend by inserting the word "detailed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, line 8, before the word "data," insert the word "detailed," so as to read:

That the detailed data or information obtained by the commission shall not be made public—

And so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. In the interest of an improvement of the language of the bill, on page 7, line 18, after the word "Constitution," I move to insert the word "Congress."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. On page 11, line 11, after the word "expenses," I move to insert the word "and." These amendments, I will say, are merely to correct the phraseology.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 11, line 11, after the word "expenses," it is proposed to insert the word "and," so as to read:

Expenses, and per diem rates of allowance—

And so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that completes all of the amendments which I have to offer.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to offer two or three amendments to the pending bill, the first of which I send to the desk and ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, beginning with line 16, it is proposed to strike out all of the paragraph down to and including the word "Senate" in line 20, and in lieu thereof to insert the words "Federal Trade Commission."

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, as I understand, this bill merely provides for an investigation. We now have an organization constituted under our Government, and a very efficient organization, which has been established for the very purpose of conducting investigations. In these times when we are trying to economize, or, at least, when we should be trying to economize, I can not see any necessity for appointing five commissioners, at a salary of $7,500 a year each, with all the attendant expenses, to carry on the proposed investigation; in fact, I do not think we shall get very far with the investigation anyway.

I take it that some one member of the Trade Commission with about a couple of clerks and in about a couple of months could secure all the information which will be obtained under this bill, should it become a law. I am opposed to so much investigation. We know the condition of the coal business in this country and this proposition if carried out would be a useless expenditure of time, money, and energy. In the first place, I think there is no necessity for the proposed investigation, and, in the next place, there is no necessity for the appointment of a commission to conduct the investigation should it be ordered. I feel that the Federal Trade Commission could do everything which the proposed coal commission could do, and do it much better and with much less expense to the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course the adoption of the amendment would have the effect of defeating the pending bill, and I trust it will not prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 18, after the word "Senate," it is proposed to insert the following:

Who shall be selected, as far as practicable, from the different sections of the country, and no more than three of whom shall belong to one political party.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the amendment speaks for itself and it needs no argument. I hope it will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let the amendment again be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I assume, Mr. President, of course, that the President will so far as practicable in the appointment of the coal commission select men from different sections of the country; but I do not think that at all should be the rule by which the President should be guided in this particular matter. He will endeavor to select the men who are best fitted for the work, even though they might all come from one particular section of the country. I have no particular objection to the amendment, because I do not think it will be any particular embarrassment to the President.

So far as the other question is concerned, I assume, of course, that this commission will not be a partisan commission, and therefore I do not object to having that part of the amendment agreed to. It might be a little embarrassing, if the President should find a number of men peculiarly fitted for the work belonging to one party—even if he should find them all in the Democratic Party—he would probably desire to have a chance to select them. I have no idea in the world that in this particular kind of commission the President would think of selecting a partisan commission. If he did, he would very likely destroy the commission if that was in his mind. The difficulty with the amendment is that it might enforce the doing of something which would embarrass the commission rather than help. However, at the present time, Mr. President, I am not going to object to that amendment, though I may look into it later.

Mr. DIAL. I was trying by this proposition to relieve the President of any embarrassment. I sought to help him. I thank the Senator from Idaho for accepting the amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, from the standpoint of the anthracite industry and continued peace in that industry it seems to me that it is of the very highest importance that the President should be absolutely free to select disinterested experts as members of the proposed coal commission, and that we should not in any way tie his hands by qualifications of political alignment or residence or geography of any sort. The whole question of peace in the anthracite region in 1923 will depend upon the fairness and the comprehensiveness of the report of the commission proposed to be created. I know whereof I speak, because I have been in touch with the negotiations which led up to the present strike settlement, and I know that both parties are looking forward expectantly to the appointment of an able commission that will cast full light on the problems that have agitated the coal region. For that reason I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, heretofore I have opposed provisions sought to be embodied in laws creating commissions requiring the President to take any particular portion of their membership from a certain political party. I did that under the preceding administration, and I see all the more reason in the case of a commission such as is proposed to be created why the President should not be hampered and why we should not by legislation inject politics into a commission of such a character. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, beginning in line 1, it is proposed to strike out:

(d) The advisability or wisdom of nationalizing the coal industry.
(e) The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation and control of the coal industry.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, in my opinion, subdivision (d) is merely an invitation to all of the disgruntled people of the country to appear before the proposed commission to complain and talk about nationalizing the coal industry. So far as I am concerned, I do not want to see any effort made to nationalize the railroads or the coal industry or anything else. I want the various industries of the country to remain in the hands of private individuals. I feel that the language which I seek to strike out will merely afford an invitation to people who have become dissatisfied to find fault and to complain with the conduct of business. I thought this administration were going to have less politics in business and more business in politics, or something of that sort, but it seems that they have in some way lost the text or, at any rate, they do not stick to it. I am trying to help them a little, for they need a great deal of help. They are wobbling around and flopping about and it seems difficult for them to stabilize themselves.

If the bill shall be adopted containing the provision which I seek to strike out, the commission will go gallivanting around over the country to hear all the soreheads and the dissatisfied element generally who wish to nationalize everything. We heard something about nationalization during the war and directly after the war, and we are being nationalized now until many of us are in bankruptcy, and nearly every man who has a little business wishes he did not have, for he can hardly pay his taxes. I do not see any use of holding out any hope here, like sirup trying to draw flies, and then come back here and have to kill the hope. It is out of place and it ought to be beneath the notice and dignity of the Senate to encourage any such investigation along impracticable, improbable, revolutionary, and, as I view it, I. W. W. lines. That is about where we are drifting. We ought to shut the door against all such foolishness and nonsense.

Of subdivision (e) about the same thing may be said. If we are going to investigate the coal industry, let us investigate it in a sensible way, but do not let us hatch up any more foolisms in this country.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am so much in sympathy with the main features of this bill and the purposes that it is meant to accomplish that I do not like to put myself in the attitude of offering an amendment or supporting an amendment to what may be considered any material feature of the bill; but I sympathize with the position of the Senator from South Carolina in regard to what he says concerning subdivision (d). I am not going to discuss the question, Mr. President, further than to say that I think that subdivision will invite all sorts of propaganda and the putting forth of all kinds of theories relative to the nationalization of this great industry. The commission to be created will be besieged by every believer in State socialism to report favorably upon the nationalization of the coal mines. I do not believe that we ought to enter upon that field at this time. I think the other provisions of the bill will furnish enough for the commission to do without going into the theoretical and speculative question of the nationalization of the coal mines of the country. I think it may readily be shown that public ownership or nationalization has in hardly any instance proved satisfactory and that in many it has proved disastrous. I do not think we want to cloud the immediate issue here, the settlement of present controversies, by introducing this subject into this legislation.

I hope the question will be divided and that we may vote separately on the first proposition involved in the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. I understand that both subdivision (d) and subdivision (e) are embraced in the amendment offered by him, and when it comes to a vote I will call for a division of the question so that subdivision (d) may be voted upon separately.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I may have a different view of this matter from my colleague on the committee, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], and I may not. This is simply an investigation of a subject which is up for discussion among a great many people in this country who are neither I. W. W's nor insane. It is a feature of the coal situation which has presented itself to men of very high intelligence who have given a great deal of study to it. They have felt, and I feel, that an investigation of it is a wise thing to have. If, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] says, nationalization is impracticable and has proven impracticable in many instances and disastrous in others, that will be the thing which this commission will likely report to this body. If the evidence or the showing is to that effect, we will have it disposed of, as I assume that this commission is not going to be composed of the kind of men that Senators seem to fear. In fact, I should be very glad to have my friend from South Carolina, if it were possible, on this commission. I am satisfied that he would make a thorough investigation of it if he were authorized to do it, and I do not think there is very much doubt about what his report would be when it came in. But, Mr. President, I am not afraid of investigating any feature of the coal industry; and if there is anything at all in nationalization which it is worth while for this body to have when it comes to establish a national policy I want this body to have it. I do not want the ordinary commission, which goes out and gathers a lot of incoherent data and brings it back here and dumps it into the wastebasket of the Congress and leaves it there. I desire, so far as I have any ambition at all in regard to this matter, to see something of a crystallization of these facts into some policy which will enable the Congress to deal with the matter from a national standpoint and adopt a national policy in regard to the coal industry. It is altogether probable that the commission which will be appointed in this matter will be as desirous of arriving at a practical policy as anybody in the Senate; and it is not to be presumed, because they are investigating this matter, that it is foreordained that they are going to recommend nationalization.

I say, therefore, that it is wise to have a complete study, a thorough investigation, a comprehensive investigation of the entire subject. Let us know it in all its details and establish once for all, if we can, a national policy with reference to this great industry upon which the industrial life of our people so largely depends.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, even if it were desirable to investigate, through a commission appointed by the President, the establishment of a socialistic régime in the control of the second greatest industry in the United States—perhaps its greatest industrial enterprise—I doubt the propriety of doing it as an addendum to an effort to secure an immediate adjustment of certain unfortunate conditions existing in that industry and in the transportation system of the country.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has very wisely suggested in his amendment that this committee shall report on or before a certain date in the immediate future. If the Senator from Idaho should go into this question of nationalization it is not within the realm of human intelligence to discuss so vast and intricate a subject, one that has fixed the attention of the governments of the Old World, one upon which the greatest political economists have written volumes, and one about which jurists and statesmen have differed for generations. It will be utterly impossible for this commission, with a simple, definite, tangible program before it—one with which I am not in sympathy, but which I am glad to see is not so intricate or so difficult as the proposal of the Senator from Idaho—I am not in favor of increasing the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the purpose of fixing the price of coal, but that, if it is done, will be done for the simple purpose of preventing the charging of an excessive price in the immediate future, and after the mines resume and before the present demand is supplied. You will becloud the issue, you will delay a definite result, you will prevent an immediate report about certain things we wish settled at the earliest possible moment, by going into this interminable question.

Mr. President, I admire the willingness of the able Senator to meet any question with an open mind. I agree with him and with Thomas Jefferson that an untrammeled mind should question all things divine and human, and should weigh, if need be, the very divinity of God; but there is a vast difference between our duty here and the courage of the philosopher who is willing to look any question in the face, the courage of the political economist who is willing to question any theory, however wild or dangerous. There is a place to make dynamite, but it is not in the Senate of the United States. There is a place to play with questions that are full of revolution and chaos, that shake governments to their foundations, that destroy industry, but the place is not the Senate, and the place is not before commissions appointed by the President which will necessarily give more or less of a political color to their findings.

In addition to that, this investigation must result in producing the very condition you wish to escape. What are you trying to do? To prevent profiteering in coal; to prevent the holders of over three trillions of tons of coal from selling a modicum of it at an inordinate price.

Mr. BORAH. Is not the Senator speaking now in particular of the bill which has just passed?

Mr. STANLEY. I am speaking of this bill.

Mr. BORAH. This bill has nothing at all to do with that subject.

Mr. STANLEY. I know, but what I mean to say is this: When you go into the subject of fixing the value of coal, or go into the subject of preventing profiteering, or any other like subject, and you frighten these men who hold coal enough to supply the world for 5,000 years with the idea that we are liable to have this thing taken over by the Government, we are liable to establish a socialistic régime, we are liable to have Government ownership and Government control, what is the natural thing for the coal owner to say? "It is coming. We had Government regulation of railroads and the prices of railroad securities went to smash." The Government did this very same thing in England, in Prussia, and in the coal fields of Austria and of Russia, and the value of these properties have been destroyed or immensely impaired. Will you not force the coal operators to say with Louis XV, "'After us the deluge.' Let us make what we can and what we may out of these properties while they are still in our hands, for to-morrow is the 'day of judgment' for us—the Government and the socialists will destroy us. Let us sell what we can for as much as we can and as fast as we can." Nothing will prevent profiteering on the part of the coal dealer like a belief that he is to have the same title to his property as the owner of the land under which the coal is situated, as the owner of any other real estate or any other chattel. I think this feature of the inquiry is unwise at any time and is especially injudicious at this time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the logic of the able Senator's argument is, of course, to leave the coal industry unregulated, uncontrolled, untouched in any way. We now have before us some object lessons in regard to what that means. These men have, as he says, enough coal under their control to last thousands of years, and they are in a position to do what they are now doing, some of them—because I do not care to condemn them all—and that is to take advantage of the distress of the community to gather untold millions into their hands.

What we desire by this investigation is to see if we can not work out some national policy which will give the public the protection which it is entitled to have, and at the same time, of course, to deal in the utmost fairness with the men who hold this vast property. If there is any desire upon the part of anyone lurking about here anywhere to confiscate property, it is not upon the part of those who are urging the creation of this commission. No such thought enters our minds; but we do desire that this vast industry be subjected to some reasonable regulation and control, so that the public may share with the industry the vast wealth which God in His infinite wisdom has planted in the bowels of the earth, and the sole object and purpose here is to work out a national policy. Shall we say in advance that there are certain features of this policy which we will not stop to investigate; there are certain angles of it which we will not survey; there are some features of it to which we close our minds?

The Senator says that this may be a subject for the philosopher, for the economist, for the man in the outer world. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to say so without reflecting upon the great body of which I am a humble Member, that is one of the criticisms which are passed upon this body. The outer world is ahead of us. Business has outstripped our legislation here. The energy of the outside world has surpassed us in the race, and we are lagging behind, for the reason that either through political timidity or because we think it is unwise we refuse to grasp the questions which the development of the world is forcing upon the minds of everyone else. Let us at least have the courage to seize this great problem in all its angles and at every point, and investigate it from every angle of which we can conceive.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, the able and accurate Senator from Idaho is surprising in his statement that the Senator from Kentucky is inclined to leave this great business unregulated so far as profiteering is concerned. The best years of my life have been given in a more or less futile attempt to prevent profiteering in coal, in steel, in tobacco, and in everything else. I regard extortion, whether by organizations selling or buying a commodity or producing it, whether by men who have fuel to sell, cloth to sell, skill to sell, or anything else, interference with the natural course of trade, of supply and demand, as a crime so far extended, touching intimately the lives of so many citizens, as to approach in its enormity the crime of treason itself. Save only the man who raises his hand to tear down the flag, he who devotes his talents or his wealth toward the destruction of the law of supply and demand, to the artificial limiting of output, or the raising of price for the purpose of wholesale plundering of a helpless people, is akin to a traitor and deserves the severest punishment this Government can inflict.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am well aware of the view of the Senator from Kentucky. I am also well aware that the Senator from Kentucky has, as he said, given his time and energy to that subject in an effort to control it. But what I said was that the logic of the Senator's contention would be to accomplish that purpose. The Senator said, for instance, that we had regulation and control of railroads, and railroad securities went to pieces. I understood him to mean from that that if we had regulation of coal, it would destroy the industry. I was not impugning the motive, much less patriotism, of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I know that.

Mr. BORAH. I only contend that the logic of his argument would lead us to the point where we would have to drop the investigation and drop any kind of regulation of this industry entirely.

Mr. STANLEY. No; the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Kentucky are in exactly the position of two good Christians who have two entirely different ways of going to heaven, but both want to get there. Our purposes are the same, but for once our religions are entirely different. I would prevent extortion in the coal industry by a rigid enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law and other antitrust laws, through any agreement between two producers of coal shipped in interstate commerce, fixing the price or limiting the output, whether between the miners producing the coal or between the jobbers and the miners distributing and selling the coal. I would reenforce the commodities clause of the interstate commerce act, and I would prevent any carrier from owning a coal mine or any coal mine from owning a share in a common carrier.

Mr. BORAH. It may be possible, and I presume it is not improbable, that this commission will ultimately report that along such lines alone we can deal with this matter; I do not know. But I do not want to send the commission out in the first place so limited in its scope and in its authority as to have to come back here with a certain line of action. When they do report, I want them to have had the authority which will enable them to say, "This out of a full investigation was all we could find that was reasonable."

With reference to the Sherman antitrust law, during the brief period in which I have been here I have always been a believer in the Sherman antitrust law and so recorded my belief by my vote; but through that peculiar method which we have of dealing with subjects here, doing things which we do not profess we do, we have emasculated and practically destroyed the Sherman antitrust law right here in the Senate.

You can not have a law which applies to one class of people in this country and enforce it which does not apply to another class doing the same thing. It is obnoxious to the first principle of an American and his conception of government. Yet we have exempted this class and that class from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law, and now we have nobody whom we can seize under the Sherman antitrust law, practically, except those who have not enough votes, supposedly, to hurt us very badly.

The labor organizations have been exempted, the farm and agricultural interests have all been exempted, and nobody is now subject to the law except the monopolies, pure and simple, in certain lines of industry, and we are not going to gather sufficient moral force in this country to enforce the law against one particular class when all other classes are exempted from the operation of the law. So, in my judgment, unless we restore the Sherman antitrust law in all its amplitude, in all its authority, it is at the present time a dead letter, and the talk about it, so far as enforcing it is concerned, does not bring a sense of relief to anybody against exorbitant rates or exorbitant prices.

Mr. STANLEY. I appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober.

Mr. BORAH. No, the Senator does not, because I voted against all those exemptions.

Mr. STANLEY. I know it, and I do not mean that. I appeal from the philosophy of the Senator from Idaho, just expressed, to the philosophy of the bill for which he is standing. I did not mean to charge the Senator with any lack of sincerity, because I know he is sincere. He is exactly right; you will never prevent combinations in restraint of trade, you will never prevent monopolies, you will never prevent extortion, except in State socialism, as long as you refuse to enforce laws against combinations in restraint of trade, wherever those combinations, made by anybody, good or bad, high or low, no matter whether tilling the soil, digging mines, or doing anything else.

If a man agrees with his neighbor to charge more than a reasonable price for a thing, and uses the instrumentality of interstate commerce for the purpose, he should be punished, or prevented, at least. If you paralyze the Sherman Antitrust Act, if you refuse to punish monopolies which have been illegal under the common law for nearly a thousand years, or as long as we have had a common law, which have been illegal in every civilized community which ever pretended to protect its people from the power of combinations of wealth; if the Government refuses to punish monopolies, then there is but one thing for the Government to do, and that is to take over the properties themselves. You will either have a Government where people own their own property and obey rational laws in the use of it, or universal extortion as a result of the violation of such laws, when the Government necessarily, to prevent that extortion, must take control of those things itself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is that alternative——

Mr. STANLEY. That alternative is right here.

Mr. BORAH. It is that alternative which I want this commission to investigate. I want them to face the two propositions, that we have either to take State socialism, or we have to take the other proposition and enforce it, provide for it, and do the work which devolves upon us. It is two halves of an apple. You have to examine both propositions. One supports the other and one is the alternative of the other. So let us go at this thing as the Senator does when he examines it; examine both sides of it and all parts of it, and determine what is best for this Republic to do. Let us be courageous enough to grasp it in all its details and in all its comprehensiveness.

Mr. STANLEY. An investigation to determine whether a socialistic governmental control and Government ownership is necessary to remedy existing conditions is like a doctor investigating whether it is better to let the patient die of disease or commit suicide. We are not investigating any remedy; we are investigating which of two things is the most certain to produce national and industrial ruin.

Mr. BORAH. They will determine that.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, instead of investigating, as I would love to see the Senator from Idaho do, and as he can so well do, the feasibility of strengthening the commodities clause of the interstate commerce act, you passed an act which forbade carriers controlling and owning certain industries along their lines, but you did not provide a corresponding inhibition against the great industrials owning a carrier. So your commodities clause is not worth the paper it is written on. I tried for four long years to induce Congress to remedy that situation, until I was denounced as a flannel-mouthed demagogue, and now they say I am a hopeless reactionary and conservative; but I stand now where I have always stood, and where I expect to die.

Mr. BORAH. I am traveling, then, along the road the Senator traveled 8 or 10 years ago; so he must be patient with me.

Mr. STANLEY. No; the Senator is getting off on a side road. I tried to get them to strengthen the commodities clause, and if it had not been for the owners of a few tap lines and a few sawmills who came here, I would have succeeded. Two or three other industries had some plant facilities which they owned, and on which they earned four or five thousand per cent, and that ended it. On one occasion, I remember, when the great Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was on the other side, he representing the United States Steel Corporation as attorney, and very ably and properly so, and I was acting as chairman of the committee, Judge Gary appeared as a witness and advocated price fixing by the Government, fixing the price of labor and of commodities.

Mr. BORAH. Who did that?

Mr. STANLEY. Judge Gary. I told him then, respectfully—and I remember it amused my good friend the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] very much—that the only difference between him, the judge, and the other socialists was that he was an unconscious socialist, and that that was the only difference between him and Mr. Debs on that proposition.

Separate these railroads from the industrials and say to the anthracite people, "You can own your own mines and run them, hire labor in the open market, but you can not own and control a single railroad," and the anthracite question will settle itself; you will not have to go any further.

Mr. BORAH. That is included in the bill. But there are some gentlemen I know who are just as much opposed to that as the Senator is to the other and would like to see that cut out of the bill.

Mr. STANLEY. Oh, yes. I do not know whether they will call me radical or a reactionary, a demagogue or a conservative. I do know I have certain ideas, and it does not matter much which class they put me in.

If you should absolutely separate the tangled and intricate relations between the producers of coal and the carriers all over this country, let the railroads pay as much as anybody else pays for coal and carry everybody's coal and keep the railroads from the secret ownership of mines and the granting of preference in the mines they own, you would go a long ways toward settling this problem.

These are known, simple, tangible, manifest evils.

Are you investigating the things that cause the trouble? No; you are investigating the standardization of the coal industry. Standardize the coal industry and you make of it a corpse; to standardize the coal industry or to standardize the railroads of this country is to stiffen them into enternal death. Standardization of the railroads is a form of industrial rigor mortis, and necessarily so.

Let us consider some of your standardization. You might just as well invoke God Almighty to improve the human race by making all men 6 feet 2 inches high, with Roman noses, blue eyes, and bald heads. In the fact that this great mining industry is not standardized, as in the fact that the railroads were not standardized, rests their wonderful success. At one time the great railroads of this country committed all kinds of sins, and I denounced them for it, and they have denounced me. No man has ever been more heartily hated by railroad presidents than I. But with all that fight; with the Chicago & Alton scandal; all the Pittsburgh, Bessemer & Lake Erie extortion; the Gould operations; the Harriman operations; the Morgan operations—I have seen instances where they would pick up $50,000,000 at a time without any consideration for it whatever, things that would have made highwaymen blush—with all that, and with all their sins scarlet upon them, it is true, nevertheless, that these men understood the country through which they went, and understood the men with whom they dealt.

The Great Northern and the Northern Pacific took on the very atmosphere of Hill. Harriman's roads were a part of him like the fiber of his being, breathing his ambition and his daring. Those great roads, operated by individuals, often in violation of the law, but free, untrammeled, able to adapt themselves to existing conditions, traversed this continent in two generations. We built twice as many miles of railroad as all the rest of the world put together. In two or three generations we had crossed rivers, spanned estuaries, conquered mountain ranges; had bound the Atlantic to the Pacific; had made the mountains and the plains adjacent; had placed the fruits of California among the frozen wilds of the North. We have made Florida and Maine close neighbors. We were hauling a ton of freight at less cost than any other railroads in the world. We were hauling passengers with greater celerity and at less cost than any other carrier on earth.

We standardized. We made one mile of road just as much like another as two peas. We paid every trackwalker the same wage; we paid every engineer the same wage; we made conditions in Louisiana identical with conditions in Connecticut and in Pennsylvania, with the result that in some places the laborer was not sufficiently paid, in other places he was overpaid, and with the result that we kited railroad rates and fares so high that to-day they have destroyed industries which formerly they served, and the high plane of freight rates will end in reducing the revenue of the carriers.

Take a simple instance: We had the Hog Island navy yard, the great war babies in Connecticut and in Massachusetts and in Pennsylvania. We had the great munition works. Expert and skilled labor was demanded in those works, and they drew that labor from our railroads. The railroads in turn raised their wages to keep the men at work. In Alabama, in Kansas, in a dozen other places, they hardly knew there was a war as far as industrial conditions were concerned. Those men could live on one-half or one-third the prices that maintained in places where this scarcity of labor existed and this high cost of living had already taken place.

The moment we standardized the roads we raised wages where it was not necessary, and we raised rates to a point where we have paralyzed the traffic of the United States. To-day the thing that would save the railroads, the thing that would save the transportation of this country, is to do away with this nationalization, to do away with this foolish attempt to consolidate them all, and freeze them into one body, to give them individual initiative, to allow them to adapt themselves to conditions.

Take the carpenters, for instance. The carpenters are organized, the bricklayers are organized, the stonecutters are organized, all over the United States, but they are not standardized; they are not consolidated. The bricklayer in California will get twice as much, possibly, as the bricklayer in Connecticut for the same work, working the same hours, and laying the same number of brick. Take any report of the wages paid, and it will be found that they vary according to local conditions. Hours of labor must necessarily vary with local conditions. In the far North we have a day of one length and in the far South a day of another length. Business must adapt itself to its soil; it must adapt itself to its habitat. It must have pliability and resourcefulness. The resourcefulness of American labor, the resourcefulness of the pioneer, the resourcefulness of the individual, and of the corporation have made us the most puissant country in the world. That individuality you would destroy, that initiative you would suppress. Your standardization is nothing more nor less than the pressing of men and industries into an iron groove that has paralyzed the industry of the Old World. The reason why American labor is so much more intelligent, is so much more effective, is so much more aspiring, was all told by De Tocqueville about 75 years ago. It was because the American laborer still retained the courage and resourcefulness of the pioneer, because he thought and acted for himself, because he worked out his own salvation, and in doing it worked out the salvation of his country as no other people in the world ever have.

I protest against this effort of the Senator from Idaho to borrow this socialistic strait-jacket from Prussia and from Russia and place it upon the puissant limbs of American labor, place it upon the thriving agencies of American capital, to destroy the one thing that has made the Yankee what he is and made America the greatest and wealthiest and proudest and freest country in all the world.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is satisfied that I do not disagree with him in any of the fundamental propositions involved in the bill unless indeed he calls the one particular subdivision to which I objected a fundamental thing. I referred a moment ago to the amount of work the commission would have to do independently of studying the question of nationalization. Let me call attention specifically to the duties of the commission:

Said commission shall ascertain and report to the President and Congress: As to the ownership and titles of the mines; cost of production; profits realized by the operators or owners of said mines during the last 10 years; labor costs; wages paid; irregular production and suggestions as to the remedy for the same; the conditions generally under which coal is produced; the causes which from time to time induce strikes, thereby depriving interstate carriers of their fuel supply and otherwise interrupting the flow of interstate commerce; and all facts, circumstances, or conditions which would be deemed helpful in determining and establishing a wise and efficient policy by the Government relative to said industry.

That is a pretty big field, Mr. President, covered by that one paragraph alone. Think of the duties devolving upon this commission if they obey the terms of the paragraph just read, and then, in addition to that, all the specific duties which they are to perform, such as studying and submitting—recommendations relative to—

(a) Standardizing the mines upon the basis of their economic productive capacity—

And so forth.

(b) Standardizing the cost of living for mine workers and the living conditions which must be supplied or afforded in order to surround the workmen with reasonable comforts—

And so on; and then subdivision (c), relating to the standardizing of a basis of arriving at the overhead costs of producing and distributing.

And further:

(e) The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation and control of the coal industry.

All this is aside from the proposition that they shall study and make recommendations in regard to the question of the nationalization of the coal mines and the coal industry.

Mr. President, I am frank to say, in answer to a statement made by the Senator from Idaho, that I do not want Congress to be put now in an attitude before the country of studying the question of the nationalization of the coal industry. I think I am warranted in saying that by reference to experience elsewhere in State ownership. I want to call attention to a late authority, one which I have always regarded as very high authority, Viscount Bryce, in his latest and last book, "Modern Democracy," and what he has to say about the attempted nationalization of industries in Australia and elsewhere. He says:

It is no less difficult than important to ascertain the actual results of the State assumption of industries. Some sections of State employees certainly gain in having better wages, and all gain in greater security of employment. But what of the community at large? Is the work efficiently done, and done as cheaply as it would be on a system of private employment? My stay in Australia was not long enough to enable me to probe the matter to the bottom, and some of my informants may have been biased. But such evidence as I obtained went to show that in proportion to the wages paid less work was done than private employers obtained. The workers were said to do as little as they well could. "The Government stroke" has passed into a byword. "They dropped the tools the moment the hour came for stopping," because "the slower the work goes the more of it remains to be done." One informant not hostile to the Labor Party remarked that the systematic practice of slack working to make every job last long had a bad effect on character, because it prevented men from doing their best. The foreman fears to keep the men up to the mark or to dismiss them, because they may appeal to their union, and the union can influence the member of the legislature for the district and he in turn the executive government.

He states in a note what is said by Sir C. Wade, as follows:

In Government undertakings laxity in discipline or efficiency was soon manifested by loss instead of profit. * * * As in construction (of works) so in the administration of Government departments political interference should be avoided. Experience shows that if a strike takes place in a Government establishment ministerial intervention is enforced and a concession made to the strikers. The Government position is always difficult. If the ministry resist the demands, votes may be imperiled; if they yield, discipline may be threatened.

Further, Mr. Bryce says:

If a labor ministry is in power it can not resist labor pressure. Some of my informants declared that these things were notorious in the case of the great irrigation works undertaken by New South Wales and Victoria. Grievances, real or fancied, are constantly brought up in Parliament, wasting its time and lessening the authority of those who direct the work. When complaints accumulate a commission of enquiry may be appointed, with further expenditure of time and money, and no relief of the disquietude. It is alleged that where government owns the wharves the workers, though paid twice as much per ton for loading and unloading as the ordinary market rate, loiter over their work to prolong it.

The unions, practically controlling the Government whenever a labor ministry is in power, are both employers and employed, and it is natural that where considerations of State business interest come into opposition with personal and political self-interest State business interest should go to the wall. Some one has summed up the labor policy as "more wages for shorter hours; less work and more amusement."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, suppose a commission appointed, after a full investigation and a thorough consideration of the subject, should adopt that theory and report it back here to Congress, the Senator from South Dakota would be perfectly delighted with the report.

Mr. STERLING. I would be perfectly delighted with it, because I think the report would be in accord with the facts developed by the commission.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Kentucky are arguing against the proposition, but they have both spent many hours, many days, and many weeks investigating this subject. They have gone into the field of nationalization and have studied it; but they refuse to permit a committee of the Senate to do that which they have done, and which has enabled them to arrive at the conclusion which they have reached.

Mr. STERLING. No, Mr. President. I am proceeding upon this theory: That investigation elsewhere, the conclusions of close observers elsewhere of nationalization and State ownership, ought to convince us now that we ourselves ought not to consider the question or submit it to a commission to consider at the present time.

Mr. President, as I stated before, as a mere practical question now before us in the consideration of this bill, the committee will have an abundance to do without considering the speculative, academic question of the nationalization of the coal industry. Think of the field that it must cover independently of the provision in regard to nationalization; and that, too, without inviting propaganda, as I said awhile ago, from every believer in State socialism throughout the country; without being harassed continuously, as they are apt to be, by the advocates of State socialism and the ownership by the State of the public utilities of the country.

Mr. President, we have already had a sample of it. We had a qualified nationalization of the railroads awhile ago, and we know what came from that; that from that came the propaganda for Government ownership of the railroads. Seeing no possibility of reaching that goal, the advocates of that proposition then sought, through the Director General of Railroads—our former Secretary of the Treasury—to have Federal control continued for a period of five years. Had that been done we should have been no nearer the goal than we were when we began. As it is, we have legislated; we passed the transportation act, and we shall have other acts, possibly, amendatory of that, as needs may require. By ending Federal control, by escaping Government ownership, we escaped what I believe would have been a national calamity.

We have other sources of authority. See what Viscount Bryce has said about the ownership of the Great Western Railway system in France. Other railways in that country are privately owned, as I understand, but the ownership by the State of that railway system has proven disastrous to the State; the road has been run at a great loss. So, Mr. President, there is the immediate question. Not that I am afraid of the investigation; but in view of the facts which we have before us in regard to nationalization and what it has resulted in elsewhere where it has been tried, we do not want now to invite either the theorists or the discordant and dissatisfied elements of the country to enter upon a new campaign for the nationalization of this or other industries.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has assumed that if the report of the proposed commission should unanimously favor private ownership and state unequivocally that the nationalization and the standardization of the coal business was impracticable the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] would be alike delighted. I can say truthfully that such a report would not delight me. This demand does not spring from a conviction in people's minds.

Mr. BORAH. What demand?

Mr. STANLEY. The demand for the nationalization of the coal industry.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President——

Mr. STANLEY. No.

Mr. BORAH. It does spring from a conviction. It may be an unfounded and it may be an ill-advised one, but there are men who believe just as sincerely in it as the Senator from Kentucky believes against it.

Mr. STANLEY. That may be; but this is the demand of a faction; this is the demand of an organization; this is but a part of a general propaganda. The individual socialist is sincere and has convictions, but socialism, as I see it, is not a conviction; it is an organized discontent. It rises and falls with the state of popular excitement. The people who believe in it are not like the opponents, for instance, of a protective tariff or of a strict construction of the Constitution. They are not the advocates of a fixed principle.

A man becomes a socialist not because he believes in any particular thing but because he is against many particular things. It is a cry of anger and resentment, a state of hysteria to a greater or less extent. It is fanned by agitation; it is fanned by discussion. Every disordered mind, every bug, every wheel that is loose in all the heads of all the cranks in the country will go fanning and buzzing the minute the Congress of the United States begins to discuss that sort of thing.

This is a country of happy homes; but there are people who believe in the destruction of the home and in the nationalization of women; they believe that the institution of marriage is an absurdity. Let us start an investigation touching the propriety of the proposition to nationalize women, to do away with marriage, and every unhappily married couple in the country, every bug that hates women, and every bugess that hates men will immediately be worked into a frenzy because the Federal Congress is considering the nationalization of women. All the cranks and all the criminals and all the fools in the country are stirred up by the waving of that sort of a red flag from the Dome of the Capitol. Leave these questions that act on bugs exactly like poking a hornets' nest acts on the hornets. It turns them all loose. Let the sleeping dog alone. Do not discuss the propriety of doing anything you know you are not going to do. Do not talk about giving medicine to a patient that you know will either kill the patient or drive the patient crazy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, so far as I know, there is no sentiment in the committee which reported this bill in favor of Government interference with private business as that term is generally used; there is not a Member of the Senate who wants the Government to put its hands in any respect or in any way upon private business; but when it comes to the consideration of an industry which deals with and controls the very essentials of life, then there are men in this country, and, indeed, in this Chamber, who propose, if necessary to preserve health and life, to lay the general principle behind, to stop and listen, inquire and investigate, and, if possible, require the industry to operate itself with due regard to the requirements of our people.

Two factors must appear before we depart from the general rule of non-Government interference. First, is the industry about which we attempt to inquire so vital and so important to the life and to the well-being and to the happiness of people that a breakdown or failure to function will bring hardships, suffering, and destruction of health and the necessary comforts of life? And, secondly, is the industry being conducted along lines that indicate it is more or less permanently disorganized for public service? A mere temporary misadjustment of an industry is not enough. Mr. President, the coal industry is within these exceptions. The mere temporary misadjustment of the coal industry, which provides the fuel supply of the country, is not enough to justify Government interference; but when that misadjustment continues, when it is steady, when it is constant, when it occurs year after year, I, for one, refuse to be bound by the general principle of no interference with industry by the Government. I propose to say to those conducting it, "As your industry is vital to the well-being of our people; as you can not stop or prevent the constant misadjustment of your industry, then the Government is going to make inquiry and see if it can not suggest by some form of regulation that it be managed or conducted to prevent industrial depression and health impairment."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator will note that subdivision (e) provides for investigating and making recommendations in regard to—

> The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation and control of the coal industry.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will come to that. I am now merely stating the preface of my remarks.

If there are no industries whatever in this country which are charged with a responsibility of service to the public equally as important and necessary as profit making; if there are no industries in this country which do not owe to the people service first and profit making afterwards, then we have no business to attempt to regulate anything or any business. But when we come to consider an industry organized and chartered by our laws, granted the privilege to exist by the favor of our people and specially protected by corporation privileges and exemptions, to say that when our people are starving for food or perishing for heat and light, we are powerless, there should be no interference by the Government—it is to laugh; it is to nullify one of the very purposes for which governments exist, to wit, the protection of life as well as property.

Does anybody challenge the assertion that there has been more than a temporary misadjustment of the coal industry? Can anybody who has been in touch with the business men and the home dwellers of New England and of the Northwest during recent years answer that question in any other way than by saying that the misadjustment is continuous, that it is permanent, that it is constant?

I appreciate the sentiments of the Senators in this Chamber who look upon with reluctance and who hesitate even to think of a serious discussion of nationalization of the coal industry; but let me tell you that the sentiment for it has gone on and on by reason of the continuous misadjustment of this industry, so that manufacturing associations from my State have even petitioned, asking for the nationalization of this industry. Men who hate the very name "nationalization," men who protest against Government interference with business, when driven year after year to desperation to get coal, to beg and cringe for it, and pay high prices, to be victims of extortions, at last petition their public officials to favor the nationalization of that industry. Does that condition mean anything? Is such sentiment to be waived away with a mere gesture of disgust?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator favor an inquiry as to the nationalization of the weaving of woolen and cotton cloth?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, evidently I have not made myself clear. The one thing I was trying to say here was that we are not dealing with a woolen mill, we are not dealing with a boot and shoe factory, we are not dealing with the tobacco industry, we are not dealing with the steel industry, but we are dealing with an industry that denies the public service, and that is vital to life itself, vital to industry, vital to the health and happiness and prosperity of our people; and that is why I began what I have to say by trying to indicate that a different principle, a different rule, a different obligation applies when we come to consider an industry which must make service—service to the public—go hand in hand with profit making.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator has not answered my question.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course, I do not favor it. I am opposed to Government interference with all businesses that are not charged with a very great public interest.

Mr. STANLEY. Would the Senator favor the nationalization of the steel industry?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not even favor nationalization of the coal industry. I am not making a speech for nationalization.

Mr. STANLEY. Or an investigation of it?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the Senator will listen, I am trying to say that as a United States Senator I am not going to cry socialism or run away from the word "regulation" or the word "nationalization" when it comes to an industry with this record of incapacity and misservice to humanity. That is all I am saying. With the coal bins of New England empty, with our industries closing down, with women and children and the poor suffering, it is laughable, if it was not so tragic, to think that out of all this deliberation we are only able to offer a bill here—to do what? To investigate and report! A fine thing to tell the people of New England this fall; a fine thing to tell the people of our coal-famine communities, "Oh, we have been very busy down in Washington considering your distress. We have been active. The Republican administration has passed a law to inquire, investigate, and report about the coal industry."

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, would it not be well to investigate and report about all business enterprises that have been persistently making profits, rather than service, the purpose of their activities?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Oh, no; not at all, sir. The situation is not parallel.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator think it is any more necessary to have fire in his stove than to have woolen clothes on his back? Does he think it is any more necessary to have fuel than it is to have utensils, tools, implements?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is very apparent that the Senator and I differ upon a fundamental question. The Senator thinks the coal industry is not an essential industry to health and life itself. I think it is.

Mr. STANLEY. It is not more essential than other industries. Is the Senator willing to apply the same principle to all industries that have been guilty of like offenses and that are equally essential to the happiness and comfort of the community?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have not yet charged it with any offenses. I have said that the strike and the troubles that we have just passed through have been due to the prevalence of a spirit of profit making over that of service—perhaps on the part of the strikers, perhaps on the part of the operators, or both. I am not distinguishing between them; but these struggles have been profit-making struggles, and the result is that the public have had no service. Mr. President, the friends of private ownership of industry are the men who are now trying to stop the tide that is swelling up in this country in favor of decreeing the doom of private control by asking for governmental inquiry and disinterested suggestions as to how we may preserve private ownership of this and other like industries.

I consider this bill a bill to stop nationalization of coal mines. Why? Because it is notice upon the part of the Congress of the United States to the coal industry that we are concerned about the successful and satisfactory conduct of this industry; that we consider it of such a peculiar relationship to the public that it must be conducted with an eye and a purpose of public service; that the public will not permit it to be so conducted that it paralyzes other industries and impairs health and life.

Mr. President, why do men form trusts? Why do men give up the private conduct of business and organize corporations? What is the spirit in which it is done? Let us be honest with each other. It is greed and selfishness. We can make more money by incorporating and enlarging our business than we can by doing it alone; and to assert that our Government can not check greed and selfishness when it recognizes no limits in an industry vital and essential to the prosperity and well being of the people, I say, is to confess the impotency and uselessness and absurdity of government itself.

I do not want my remarks misunderstood. I am not for the nationalization of coal mines or of other essential industries; but I do assert that when it is essential for public service to predominate in an industry and the industry collapses, then this Government should step in and regulate it, or, at least, indicate that unless it does keep in mind the public interest and service to the public, it proposes to regulate the industry rather than permit extortion or gross indifference to the general well-being.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am not afraid of the word "regulation." Neither am I afraid of the word "nationalization." I am, however, afraid of the growing sentiment in this country for nationalization. I am afraid when I see it indorsed and approved by conservative business men. I am afraid when I see manufacturers themselves pleading and asking for some relief and for some remedy, rather than financial ruin by being deprived of power, light, and heat.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; certainly.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator if it were not for the hope of reward or return upon an investment, would people organize and develop enterprises in this country?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course not; and I go so far as to say—and it is going far—that every other industry but an essential industry has a right to consider profit making first, and need consider service only in so far as it will promote its profit making, if you please.

It is a different matter, however, when it comes to an industry that means life to our people, and this industry means life itself; note I have gone further than that. I repeat, it must be more than a temporary misadjustment. It must not be merely one panic; it must not be merely one strike; it must not be merely one breakdown, but it must be showing evidence of continuous breakdown; and that is what the coal industry, more than any other industry, has given repeated evidence of.

It is, I say, puerile to sit here with this condition in this country which is germinating seeds of radicalism in places where radicalism ought not to be found and ought not to prevail, and talk of the helplessness of this Government to step in and even "investigate and report," in order to control in the future, in an emergency like this, the production and transportation and distribution of such an essential commodity as coal. Let me say to my Republican friends that in my opinion in the Eastern States of this country and in the Northwestern States the principal issue in the coming campaign will be coal. You can not talk interestingly of tariffs or revenue laws or bonuses to people shivering with the cold; and I say that unless something is done to remedy this condition the votes next November will be not party votes but votes of protest against empty coal bins. Is there any Republican who does not appreciate the effectiveness of an argument to American citizens that "for five months the coal mines of this country have been closed, for five months the Government stood idly by and did nothing, for five months this thing was known to all mankind, and the result is that you are to-day without a ton of coal, without a job or a shovel of coal in your home or your house"?

Talk about making the old-time political arguments to such people, to the women who have to form lines, and whom you will see every day at the coal yards getting a hod of coal! I repeat, there is no issue you have to face that can compare with it. The tariff burdens are insignificant in some parts of this country compared with coal; and farsighted, thinking men know it. Candidates for election in these States, if they would speak, I venture to assert would say that they were more fearful of the result in this campaign because of the unrest growing out of the coal conditions than anything else; and I venture to assert that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who protested this condition and did much to try to bring about governmental assistance, would say the same thing.

Mr. President, I have talked longer than I intended. I will sum up in a brief statement:

An essential industry, not merely passing through temporary misadjustment, but chronically in a condition of misadjustment, must be prepared to face Government investigation and possible regulation, and if Government regulation fails it must appreciate the possibility at least of a sentiment for nationalization, which may be prevented, which none of us want, and which I am opposed to as violently as anybody else, but I am not blind to its advent, if we refuse to help a famine-inflicted people.

Why has our attempts at regulation failed? Let us be honest with each other. You know what one of the Senators said on this floor, and it has never been denied, about the attempt to regulate the packers. He charged on this floor that the bill that came out of conference was one drawn by the lawyers of the packers. How can any man expect regulation to be a success if any such statement as that is true, or half true, or one-quarter true?

We know that our attempts to regulate have had to be compromise laws because of different opinions here, and we have scarcely ever had regulation attempted solely and alone for the public interest. We know and the people know how the checks and barriers have been set up to prevent regulations.

One of the greatest commissions in my State, the gas and electric light commission, had a national reputation for its regulation of those great industries to the great advantage of those industries and the public because it has had strong and effective laws, and because it has been dominated and controlled by fearless, courageous, honest men, who were not dominated and controlled by the self-interest and prejudices of one side or the other. Our efforts at regulation have failed first because our laws have not been drawn with an eye solely to the public interest, and secondly because the men that we have appointed to regulate have forsaken their public trust, unconsciously often, and have allowed their environment and their prejudices to dominate and control their acts. Bad administration by men often selected indirectly by the interests to be regulated have caused our failure in the field of Government regulations.

Mr. President, in the midst of this emergency, with an industry that has broken down, with an industry that confesses that for some reason or other it is unable to serve the public—that is the indictment—I ask, what objection can there be to having every phase and every aspect of this question studied? What can we propose, what can we suggest, that will help this industry and promote and protect the public interest in the industry? That is all that is asked for; that is all that is proposed.

Mr. President, I hope the bill will be enacted into law, imperfect as it is, but it is at least a notice to the country that the United States Congress has realized that this industry has an obligation to the public that must be guarded, that it proposes to make a thorough inquiry into it, and suggest what remedies, if any, may be made to prevent future coal famines. Every remedy recommended we may later be against, but what harm can there be in investigation and in recommendation? The other alternative is to set by and let the next and the next famine come, and then expect our people to grow more and more conservative and satisfied with the blessings of our institutions.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I hesitate at this late hour to impose further upon the time of the Senate, but I can not refrain from making a few remarks expressing my surprise, if nothing else, at the statements of the junior Senator from Massachusetts.

The smug manufacturers of New England propose to turn over the producers of coal to the socialists and to Government regulation because they preferred profits to an altruistic, disinterested, and profitless service to the public. Because they did not carefully abstain from doing a profitable business, they must be punished by men whom he has repeatedly charged with being the most persistent, insistent, and consistent profiteers this country has produced. Take the profits of the coal industry, and take the profits of the woolen manufacturers' association, as demonstrated by the Senator, and it will be seen that the manufacturers of wool have made a higher percentage upon the capital actually invested than the diggers of coal.

The cotton mills of this country have done as much profiteering as the operators of mines. The manufacturers of steel have made as large profits, have been as inordinate in their demands, as the producers of coal. The railroads were admittedly as defiant of the law, as continually and fundamentally and systematically disorganized and misadjusted, as he calls it. There was a misadjustment there. Now we have these men coming with their coffers bursting with inordinate profits, profits which the Senator himself has denounced, to lecture the coal producers on greed and extortion. He can not take a Democratic campaign book for the last 20 years that has not jumped on the tariff barons of the East, and my good and estimable friend has done as much as anybody else in denouncing them. Yet he tells us that because his profiteers can not operate without coal, the Government should take possession of somebody else's profiteers. That is a new proposition.

I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that he may not be afraid of this question, probably is not; but he will never socialize one-third of the industrial power of this country, he will never socialize two or three million men, he will never take over eight or ten billions of money, and live to see other industries escape from the whirl of that maelstrom.

I am surprised that the Senator from Massachusetts warns Senators on the other side of the political effect of this issue. Oh, Mr. President, as I turn a face of flint to the perilous proposal of the Senator from Idaho, I am not thinking of the November election. In the face of such possibilities, I am not considering how many Democrats or how many Republicans shall fall before the wild cry of anarchy. I am not considering whether it will be a Democratic pennant or a Republican pennant of victory that shall be flaunted on the Avenue. I am thinking whether or not the Stars and Stripes or a red flag shall float above the white dome of the Capitol. I am thinking not whether a protectionist policy or a free-trade policy shall color the councils of sane statesmen; I am thinking whether or not a bloody chief with a ragged mob behind him shall cover the land with hunger and desolation, blood and nakedness.

The Senator from Idaho says that political discussions, fiery and intense, inspired by political ambitions and fanned by political hate, settled the slavery question in the United States, and he expresses a strange satisfaction at that. I am amazed. Has it never occurred to the great and learned Senator from Idaho that it was that character of discussion that plunged the wisest nation in the world into the greatest war that was ever known up until then, ever witnessed in all the tide of times.

Is it not unspeakably sad, I care not whether he writes from the standpoint of Alexander H. Stephens or of Ridpath, whether he stands in the north or in the south, the east or the west, whether his tears flow more copiously over the unmarked mounds of the ragged heroes in gray or the neatly formed rows of white headstones above the boys in blue; is it not unspeakably sad that nearly 500,000 boys, clad in blue and gray, sleep forever under the green sward of the North and under the sands of the South, because inflamed politicians maddened the public to settle a question with the sword which should have been settled in council, which should have been settled by wise men in peace and without political rancor and without political agitation?

Is it not strange that England could have liberated her slaves; that Russia could have liberated her serfs; that even Dom Pedro, down in darkened Brazil, could have broken the shackles from every slave in all his domains; that in all the world that thing of the ownership of a chattel slave, which I abhor, although I am the son of a rebel captain, should have been settled without bloodshed; that here alone men should have butchered each other? And why this slaughter of the chivalry of America? Because they did not listen to the wise words of Webster, because they did not listen to the plea of the great pacificator, Henry Clay, who in his lifetime, giantlike, held apart the warring sections.

It was because we had men like Hayne and Cobb in the South; it was because we had men like Wendell Phillips and Beecher in the North, who insisted upon an interminable discussion in Congress and out of it until a whole people were maddened by their wild literature and wilder propaganda. Now, the Senator would settle this question by a discussion of the merits of socialism, as wild men settled that question of slavery by inflamed discussions and new political alignments.

Oh, let it rest. Do not make that a theme for political organizations. Do not make it the means of arraying party against party. Do not make it the football of politics. Do not have the great Senator from Idaho leading the Republicans and the great Senator from Massachusetts leading the Democrats, having one party or the other with a socialistic side show and a Bolshevistic background as its asset. If I can not overthrow Republicanism without appealing to the hatred and the ignorance and the passion and the madness of these men who have made a wreck of Europe, bad as it is, I will live under Republican rule for the rest of my life.

Let us leave this question. I appeal to the great Senator from Idaho, in the name of God and reason, and the peace of his country, do not lift the lid at this time from this Pandora's box.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a minute or two. As I stated before to-day, we have no coal mines in my State, and it is not my pleasure to know more than one man engaged in the mining business, I believe. I have now a startling announcement to make to the Senate. I have a letter in my hand, although I do not care to give the name of the writer, from a man who is shipping coal on priority orders, and he is billing the invoices at the contract prices. So it is refreshing to know that there is one honest man in the country, notwithstanding he is a coal operator. It is not my business to defend the coal operators; but I am glad to make this announcement.

I did not hear fully the Senator from South Dakota in his first remarks about my amendment. Did he ask that we separate it and vote on one provision at a time?

Mr. STERLING. That is what I asked.

Mr. DIAL. If I am allowed to do so, I will ask that that be done.

Just one word more. I was delighted to hear my good friend from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] say that he and my other good friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] are on their road to the happy hunting ground, and I hope they will have a safe delivery. But that reminds me of this other proposition to investigate under sections (d) and (e). It might be suggested that we appoint somebody to investigate the easiest road to hell. But we do not want to find out an easy road to hell, or which road would be easier than another. Therefore we do not want to investigate that proposition at all.

I take pleasure in dividing my motion, and ask that a vote be had.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, just a few words, if you please. I have great respect for the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. There is no Member of this body for whom I have higher regard in respect to ability, courage, and sincerity. In some things I think him a safe leader and sound statesman, and at times I am very happy to find myself in full and complete accord with him. But as to this measure I am at complete variance with him. I am totally opposed to this measure, all and every part of it, and especially to the first four lines at the top of page 9, which are sought to be stricken out, I believe, by the pending amendment.

It will take but few words to say what I purpose saying about the measure. As the hour of the day is becoming late——

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator desires, if it will not inconvenience him, I am going to lay the bill aside, and he may defer his speech.

Mr. MYERS. I can finish in a few minutes what I have to say, and I prefer to do so now. As the hour is becoming late, if this amendment should be voted on to-day, or if the measure should be disposed of to-day, I do not know whether or not a record vote will be had upon the pending amendment or upon the final disposition of the bill, and I am not content to let the pending amendment be voted upon or let the bill be voted upon without in some manner going on record as approving the pending amendment and opposing the bill. As quite a number of votes have been had in the Senate in the last few days on important matters without a record vote, and it is possible that the pending amendment to this bill and the bill itself may be disposed of without a record vote, I want to put myself on record at this time, in the event there should be no roll call on either, as being in favor of the amendment to strike out the first 4 lines at the top of page 9, and as being opposed to the measure itself. Therefore I shall vote for the pending amendment, and then, whether it be adopted or not, I shall vote against the measure. I consider the measure full of menace and dangerous to the welfare of the country, and I am not content to let it be disposed of without briefly expressing my opposition to it and making known my hearty dissent from it. In my opinion it gives encouragement to and affords dissemination for the seeds of socialism.

I am opposed to socialism. I am opposed to the nationalization of any industry in the country. Nationalization of industry is the first step to socialism. There are some things to which I am so opposed that I am even opposed to investigating them. I am opposed to investigating the question of the advisability of turning smallpox loose in a community, and I think the evils from that action would be far less than would arise from an attempt to nationalize any industry in the country.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator would not be opposed to investigating the question of whether or not some one was going to turn smallpox loose in the community?

Mr. MYERS. I do not consider that analogous. I am opposed to investigating the advisability, using the exact language of this measure, of turning smallpox loose in a community and I am opposed to investigating the advisability or the wisdom, again using the language of the bill, of nationalizing the coal industry, because I do not think there is any advisability whatever to be found about turning smallpox loose in a community and I do not think there is any advisability or wisdom whatever to be found about nationalizing any industry in the country.

I am opposed, further, as an illustration, to investigating the question of whether the Russian soviet government is a better form of government than we have in this country. I am opposed to investigating the advisability of abolishing the institution of marriage, the home, and the family. There are some things to which I am so much opposed that I am opposed to investigating the advisability or inadvisability of adopting them, and thereby encouraging those who believe that they would be good things. If the pending measure should be adopted with subdivision (d) and subdivision (e), as contained at the top of page 9 of the printed bill, in it, I think it would encourage and greatly hearten every socialist, Bolshevist, and communist in the country to renewed hope and increased activity, and there are lots of them in this country.

I am in favor of discouraging their activities and hopes instead of encouraging them. If we were to nationalize the coal industry the next step would be to nationalize the railroads of the country and that would be putting the Plumb plan into effect. That is what many people want to have done. The Plumb plan would be nothing but nationalizing the railroads.

Mr. BRANDEGEE rose.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator from Connecticut wish to interrupt me?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator if disagreeable to him, but I want to get his idea about his objection to considering the question of governmental regulation of the coal industry.

Mr. MYERS. I have not said I was opposed to regulation. I said I was opposed to nationalization of it and to the investigation of nationalizing it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. By "nationalization" I assume the Senator means the Government taking title to the mines?

Mr. MYERS. Taking over the coal mines of the country and operating them. That is what nationalization means.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to ask the Senator a further question, and I ask it because I am free to admit that I am perplexed about this great matter of what the remedy is for the present disturbances the Nation is enduring, and I am seeking for something that will possibly bring forth some well-considered suggestion for relief. This thought lay in my mind. Although the railroads of the country are privately owned and have not been nationalized, still we regulate them.

Mr. MYERS. Because they are engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes. Now the coal industry, in a large sense, involving the production and transportation of coal, may be engaged in interstate commerce and, in my judgment, probably is in a great many cases, and, therefore, Congress may constitutionally, possibly, have authority to regulate it.

I wanted to get clearly in mind whether the Senator was absolutely convinced that under no circumstances should the Government attempt to regulate the coal industry in some manner similar to that by which the Government, through the Interstate Commerce Commission, regulates the railroads.

Mr. MYERS. I have not said anything against that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was aware the Senator had not said anything against it. If he had I would have known where he stood. I am asking whether he does not think it would be profitable perhaps for the commission to inquire into the feasibility or advisability, or both, of the regulation of the coal industry by the Government?

Mr. MYERS. I have no vital objection to reasonable regulation of the coal industry, in so far as it enters into interstate commerce. I think the Senate just this afternoon passed what is known as the Cummins bill—I was not present, but that is my understanding—for the regulation to some extent of the coal industry, as to prices and distribution, in so far as it enters into interstate commerce. If I had been here I think I would have voted for that measure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That was a temporary expedient, was it not?

Mr. MYERS. I understand so. If it be tried and prove advantageous, it might be adopted permanently or might not be. That should depend, I think, upon the result of the trial and future need.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then the Senator would not desire to strike that provision from the bill?

Mr. MYERS. I am in favor of striking it out so long as it is coupled with the words "and control." I have no vital objection to express at this time to regulation, but I object to governmental control of the coal industry. It is not necessary to nationalize the coal industry in order to regulate it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not want the word "control" in the bill if it meant absolute control, but it may be that complete regulation of a thing can practically control it.

Mr. MYERS. Then, if complete regulation amounts to practical control, I am opposed to complete regulation. I am opposed to control whether absolute control or not. Control is control, and I am opposed to it. Those who own an industry should be allowed to control it, subject to governmental regulation, in the interest of the public, if it enters into interstate commerce. We had a case of Government control of industry in the control of the railroad industry in the country a few years ago, and I do not want any more of it. I think it was very disastrous to the country, to the railroads, and to industrial conditions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. MYERS. It was such that I do not want Government control of the railroads or any other industry any more, if we can get along without it; not unless it be absolutely necessary to the perpetuation of the Government, as it seemed to be or as we thought it was during the World War. I hope there may never be any more of it.

Mr. DIAL. May I say to the Senator that I have asked for a separate vote on subdivisions (d) and (e)?

Mr. MYERS. I am going to vote against each and both of them, separately or together. I do not care whether they are voted on separately or jointly. I am opposed to each and I am opposed to both, and I am opposed to the bill itself.

Mr. DIAL. I agree with the Senator in toto, but I wanted the Senator from Connecticut to know that we are to vote on them separately.

Mr. MYERS. Nationalization of industry is the dream, the goal, of every socialist, every Bolshevist, every communist of this country. To investigate by action of Congress their visionary, confiscatory schemes would only encourage them and give a fresh impetus to their mischievous propaganda, already carried too far. If we start on nationalization of industries, where will it end? If we should nationalize the coal industry in the country, the next thing would be to nationalize the railroads of the country, and then the metalliferous mines of the country, and in turn the steel industry of the country, the clothing industry of the country, the boot and shoe industry of the country, and then to nationalize the farming industry of the country, agriculture. If we are going to nationalize, let the Government take over all the land, all the farms, and say that the people who now own the land must work for the Government; let it say how much each former landowner shall be paid in the way of wages; that he shall be paid $50 a month and his board or $100 a month and his board.

If the land be leased, let the Government say how much those leasing it should pay for it. Nationalize and standardize the farming industry of the country. Then we would have a Russian soviet government in this country. We would have in this country just what they have in Russia. I am opposed to taking the first step in that direction. I am opposed to state socialism, and I am opposed to looking in that direction.

I think this bill one of the most ominous and significant steps the Congress has been asked to take since I have been in Congress and for many years before that. I am opposed to nationalizing any industry or beginning to nationalize any industry or encouraging sentiment in favor of it. It is simply a step in the direction of complete state socialism.

As to the next proposition, subdivision (e), as I have just said in reply to a question by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I am opposed to Government control of the coal industry. I am opposed to the Government taking control of any industry whatever. If it is going to take control of the coal industry, it might as well take control of the railroads, the steel industry, the manufacture of clothing, the woolen manufacturing business, the cotton manufacturing industry, the manufacture of boots and shoes, hats and caps, the agricultural industry, and everything else. If the Government is going to take control of coal, it would be logical for it to go further and take control of everything.

I am opposed to the bill on other grounds. I think we have now too many commissions regulating business. Congress has gone daft about commissions to regulate everything. Every time something goes wrong, the first suggestion in Congress is to create a commission to regulate it. Congress has now gone too far in that direction. We have too many commissions for the good of the country. We should have fewer instead of more. As to standardizing the mines or standardizing any industry it would be utterly destructive of every law of competition and of the law of supply and demand. We might as well try to standardize the farming industry and say that farm hands shall be paid the same price in all parts of the country and that living conditions on farms shall be the same in all parts of the country.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator think there is very much more involved in the word "control" than in the word "regulate"? Does not the regulation itself involve a control of the business or industry regulated?

Mr. MYERS. Not necessarily so; but the terms are very nearly related. They are not entirely synonymous but very nearly so. I do not entirely oppose moderate Government regulation of business which enters into interstate commerce, but I regard that as a much more moderate step than taking absolute control of the business, taking it out of the hands of the people who own it, and letting the Government control it. As the terms are in the bill connected, "to investigate governmental regulation and control," I am totally opposed to the provision. Therefore I shall support the pending amendment and oppose the bill when it comes to the final vote. The bill would be rendered somewhat less obnoxious by adopting the pending amendment, and then it would be bad enough. It contemplates embarking on a dangerous sea, full of hidden rocks. Surely the American people do not want to head in that direction. I, for one, do not. It will never be done by my vote or with my sanction.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a reprint of the pending bill, the unfinished business, with the amendments which have been adopted up to this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 8, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, September 7, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. TOWNER as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, continue to establish us in all those virtues and in the love of truth as taught by the Teacher of men. Impress the rich that their possessions are but for a moment, and the poor that their poverty may become the means of great strength. Chasten all desire. Graciously help us to know ourselves and Thy purpose concerning us. O lead us to the deepest considerations which can move and elevate human thought and action. Give us right views of the needs of our country and renew our strength and hope in all good things. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved, and the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, September 5, 1922, was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10248) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 985. An act to amend the provisions of an act relating to certain railway corporations owning or operating street railways in the District of Columbia, approved June 5, 1900.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 985. An act to amend the provisions of an act relating to certain railway corporations owning or operating street railways in the District of Columbia, approved June 5, 1900; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, after conversation with Members on the other side, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, although I do not really expect to object——

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not really expect to object, but this seems to be the situation: The gentlemen on the other side, who are charged, of course, with the primary responsibility and are in control of the proceedings of the House, have stated to us very plainly that no business is to be transacted this week. Now, whether I approve that position or disapprove it—and I may say that I think there is a great deal of business that might be taken up that is ready to be transacted, and a great many matters that ought to be considered, laid before the House—inasmuch as it is perfectly apparent that there is nothing to be done this week, it seems clear that there is no advantage in assembling here every day at 12 o'clock and passing forthwith on a motion to adjourn. That does not get us anywhere. Personally, therefore, I would be very glad to see the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] prevail.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the coal situation in northern Minnesota. A very serious situation has arisen there from the fact that they are shipping coal from Duluth, anthracite coal from Pennsylvania, into Canada, and we are compelled to get it from there at about double prices.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask a question of the gentleman, as well as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. Evidently there is no quorum in Washington, and there probably will not be a quorum here until Monday. I wish the gentleman from Minnesota would defer his request to extend his remarks until that time. I think there are a number of gentlemen on this side who would like to extend their remarks, and there are some gentlemen on this side who would like to have time to make speeches on various subjects. If we are going to adjourn over until Monday, let us take it out and adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. STEENERSON. Of course, if there is objection, I shall not press my request. I have notified the United States coal commissioner and the Minnesota commissioner to investigate.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And may I say this further: The coal situation in the Northwest, including Minnesota, was the subject of discussion in the Senate day before yesterday. It will be found that one of the Senators from the gentleman's State discussed it at some length, bringing the facts to the attention of the Senate and of the country.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken. This peculiar condition I call attention to was not mentioned in the Senate yesterday. This situation has just come to light. In order to evade the law they are shipping Pennsylvania anthracite coal to Duluth and from there into Canada for the purpose of reselling it in Minnesota at an exorbitant price. I do not think that has been explained in the Senate. I am calling attention to it now, anyway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, may I address the House for one minute before making the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is manifest to everybody that there is not a quorum of the House in the city, and for that reason from day to day a motion to adjourn has been made. In our near-by States Members are at home engaged in their primary campaigns, and it would be manifestly unfair to them to take up any business during their absence, it having been generally understood between them and other Members who are absent and those who are here that nothing would be done until the conference report on the tariff bill was reported, or at least until the first of next week. I therefore move——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that the gentleman from Kansas does not mean to say that if the conference reports are not ready by Monday the House will not have some business to transact. I understand the gentleman from Kansas has notified the membership on the Republican side to be here on Monday for the purpose of transacting business.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; that notice has been given to all the Members, and it is expected that we shall have a quorum here on Monday.

Mr. GARNER. And it is also expected that the conferees will submit a report on the tariff on that day?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is expected that the conferees will report either an agreement or a disagreement and ask instructions from the House, and it is generally known among Members that that is the matter of importance that will be then pending.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman wants to make rather emphatic the idea that it is very desirable and extremely important that all the Members of the House shall be here next Monday.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is all important that the membership of the House be in attendance here on next Monday.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is the intention, is it not, to bring up the conference report on the bonus bill within a few days after the conference report on the tariff bill is presented?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is hoped that the bonus bill will be reported to the House very soon after the conference report on the tariff.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. My time has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he remembered that he gave notice that the Members of the House should be here on Friday and Saturday and that those who are absent had notice of that fact?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was an indefinite suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order previously adopted, adjourned until Monday, September 11, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on Claims. H. R. 12223. A bill for the relief of Louis Leavitt; without amendment (Rept. No. 1206). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 12567) to provide for the retirement of certain officers of the Naval Reserve Force on account of physical disability received in line of duty after many years of service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12568) for the relief of certain officers of the Naval Reserve Force who were placed on inactive duty on or about the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BIRD: A bill (H. R. 12569) granting a pension to Thomas G. Redd; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 12570) granting a pension to Clara E. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 12571) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Lighthart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12572) granting a pension to Luther L. Haight; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 12573) granting an increase of pension to Mary Garno; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12574) granting a pension to Delia Garno; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 12575) granting a pension to Martha Flener; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: Resolution (H. Res. 424) to pay Arthur Lucas for special janitor services; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6281. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Frank L. Young Co., Boston, Mass., regarding tariff on soya-bean oil; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6282. Also, petition of Francis W. Stulz, of Brooklyn, N. Y., regarding increase of pay for policemen at supply depot; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, September 8, 1922.

Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, may the grace of Our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with the United States Senate in their personal life and official service, with all executives of the Nation, and with the land, for the sake of Him who hath taught us to pray and say:

Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MERGER OF STEEL COMPANIES (S. DOC. NO. 208, PT. 2).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the acting chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution 286, agreed to May 12, 1922, further information relative to the proposed merger of certain steel companies and steps taken by the commission, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3987) granting a pension to Malcolm D. Lincoln; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER (for Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN):

A bill (S. 3988) for the relief of the estate of Thomas N. Avery; to the Committee on Claims.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD INVESTIGATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from the previous day, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 344) providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate charges against the Federal Reserve Board, the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the resolution has to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I promised the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] last night that at this morning's session I would ask that it be referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so referred.

THE COTTON INDUSTRY.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution (S. Res. 336) submitted by me on August 10, 1922, relative to the cotton industry be taken up and disposed of. It has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and simply gives that committee power to investigate conditions in reference to the marketing and handling of cotton.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the resolution have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. SMITH. No; it does not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It does not involve the expenditure of any money?

Mr. SMITH. No.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment on page 2, line 9, to strike out the word "methods" and insert "agencies," so as to make the resolution read:

Whereas the carry-over or present stock of American cotton as given by official statistics is less than the normal carry-over; and

Whereas the present condition of the growing crop indicates a yield far below the world's demand for American cotton; and

Whereas the entire carry-over plus the indicated yield would not meet the world's demand; and

Whereas the ravages of the boll weevil are more extensive and severe than ever before in the history of the ravages of this pest, making the yield entirely problematical; and

Whereas the cost of producing cotton under these adverse conditions has been enormously increased; and

Whereas the price of cotton in the markets has failed utterly to respond to these conditions; and

Whereas the consumption of American cotton, both at home and abroad, has shown a progressive increase: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Agricultural Committee of the Senate be authorized and empowered to investigate all matters pertaining to the subject of supply and demand and marketing of cotton, with a view of determining whether any undue methods or practices are being employed by the trade in restraining the natural operation of the law of supply and demand.

Resolved further, That the committee be empowered to use such agencies as in its judgment are necessary to obtain the information desired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Morning business is closed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 9103, known as the additional judges bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not see the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] here. I shall have to object for the present. I do not know that the Senator from Tennessee would object to taking up the conference report, but I would like to have him here when it is called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Ernst	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Fletcher	New	Stanley
Broussard	Gooding	Nicholson	Sterling
Bursum	Harreld	Oddie	Sutherland
Calder	Heflin	Phipps	Swanson
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Trammell
Colt	Kellogg	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Cummins	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	McLean	Shields	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham	McNary	Simmons	Williams
du Pont	Myers	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Ashurst. Shortridge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I withdraw the objection which I made, if the Senate will permit me to do so. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] has entered the Chamber, and I understand he has no objection to the consideration of the conference report. I simply desired that he should be present when the matter was taken up. I withdraw the objection.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR ON SATURDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate meets to-morrow, after the routine morning business shall have been concluded, it take up the calendar under Rule VIII for the consideration of unobjected bills, and that the consideration of the calendar be proceeded with until it is completed, but not later than 4 o'clock, beginning with Order of Business No. 555, where the Senate left off on the last call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. That is, provided, of course, that the pending coal bill shall have been passed?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly; providing that the pending unfinished business shall have been disposed of.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to propound an inquiry. I desire to know what is involved in the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. I have asked unanimous consent that to-morrow, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate proceed with the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, and continue their consideration until 4 o'clock, provided the present unfinished business shall have been disposed of before that time.

Mr. McNARY. I entertain very little hope of the ability of the Senate to hold a quorum to-morrow. I should think that we had better adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. CURTIS. That is why I ask unanimous consent, for there will be enough Senators interested in bills on the calendar to be present in order that such bills may be disposed of to-morrow. I have made the request for unanimous consent so that to-morrow may not be wasted.

Mr. McNARY. I think that some Senator might suggest the absence of a quorum, and the day would be lost.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think there will be any danger of that if we only consider unobjected bills, and that was the request. I submit the request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on what is known as the judges' bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States; to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts; to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word. I have promised to say nothing with regard to the report save that the report presents the bill in exactly the same form in which it was formerly presented, except that the objections made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] upon his point of order have been removed from the report which is now before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. SHIELDS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that there is going to be a yea-and-nay vote called for upon the report, and I wish to say merely a word, therefore, in regard to my position.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I had just risen when the Senator preceded me to demand a yea-and-nay vote on the adoption of the report. I will ask now for the yeas and nays on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report, on which the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] who is absent, but I am advised that he would vote as I shall vote on this matter. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I do not know how he would vote on this measure, and I therefore withhold my vote; but I ask to be recorded as present for the purpose of making a quorum.

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present, and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). From the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] I transfer my general pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to my colleague [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]; and

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The roll call resulted—yeas 32, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ashurst	Ernst	McLean	Shortridge
Bursum	Fletcher	Nelson	Smoot
Calder	Gooding	Nicholson	Sterling
Colt	Harreld	Oddie	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Trammell
Curtis	Kellogg	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Lenroot	Rawson	Warren
du Pont	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ind.

NAYS—16.

Borah	Harrison	Sheppard	Stanley
Broussard	Heflin	Shields	Swanson
Capper	King	Simmons	Watson, Ga.
Culberson	McNary	Smith	Williams

NOT VOTING—48.

Ball	Elkins	Hale	Keyes
Brandegee	Fernald	Harris	Ladd
Cameron	France	Hitchcock	La Follette
Caraway	Frelinghuysen	Johnson	Lodge
Dial	Gerry	Jones, N. Mex.	McCormick
Edge	Glass	Kendrick	McKellar

McKinley	Norris	Poindexter	Townsend
Moses	Overman	Pomerene	Underwood
Myers	Owen	Reed, Mo.	Wadsworth
New	Page	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Newberry	Pepper	Spencer	Weller
Norbeck	Pittman	Stanfield	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 32, the nays are 16. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] being present and paired, there is a quorum present, and the conference report is agreed to.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PROJECT.

Mr. CAPPER. I report favorably from the Committee on Printing a resolution providing for the printing of 10,000 copies of the Muscle Shoals report, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 345), as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of Part I of Senate Report No. 831, entitled "Disposal of Muscle Shoals," for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. BORAH. What is Part I?

Mr. CAPPER. It is the Senate committee report. There has been an unusual demand for copies of the report.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does it contain the report on the Ladd bill?

Mr. CAPPER. This is the majority report.

Mr. BORAH. Does Part I contain the views as expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]?

Mr. CAPPER. It does.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. HEFLIN. It does not contain the report we made in favor of the Ladd bill?

Mr. CAPPER. It does not. We already have the other report printed, and there is a liberal supply on hand. If there are more copies needed, they can be ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF COAL.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed House bill 12472 with an amendment. The House is not in session and will not be until Monday. On account of that circumstance I ask that the bill, with the amendment, be printed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hearing none, it is so ordered.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12377, the coal commission bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission, for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is to strike out, on page 9, lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, as follows:

(d) The advisability or wisdom of nationalizing the coal industry.
(e) The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation and control of the coal industry.

Mr. STERLING. I ask for a division of the question and a separate vote on subdivision (d), that relating to the advisability or wisdom of nationalizing the coal industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the question is divisible, and will put the question on the first subdivision, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out the following:

(d) The advisability or wisdom of nationalizing the coal industry.

Mr. HARRISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Chair have the Secretary state what the proposition is we are about to vote upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state again the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first half of the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], on page 9, is to strike out lines 1 and 2, or subdivision (d), as follows:

The advisability or wisdom of nationalizing the coal industry.

Mr. STERLING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. STERLING. Those who favor striking out that provision will vote in the affirmative?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Transferring my general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with regard to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Making the same announcement as before regarding the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. DIAL] who, if present and not paired, would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER].

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]; and

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Broussard	McCumber	Simmons	Sutherland
Bursum	Myers	Smith	Swanson
Harrison	New	Smoot	Warren
Heflin	Ransdell	Stanley	Williams

So Mr. DIAL'S amendment to strike out subdivision (d) of the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the second branch of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to strike out subdivision (e) of the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, after line 16, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out:

(e) The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation and control of the coal industry.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry. Is that amendment subject to division?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the committee amendment has been divided. Does the Senator inquire whether the second branch of the amendment to the amendment is divisible?

Mr. HARRISON. If it is subject to division, I should like a vote on the question of regulation, and leaving out "control." If not, I shall offer an amendment to it.

Mr. SMITH. How does the Senator distinguish between regulation and control?

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Chair hold that it is not subject to a division?

Mr. BORAH. It does not seem to me that it is subject to division.

Mr. HARRISON. I really do not think it is, either.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the Senator from Mississippi can offer an amendment to the committee amendment to strike out the words "and control."

Mr. HARRISON. I offer an amendment to the committee amendment to strike out the words "and control."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the amendment reported by the committee, on page 9, line 4, after the word "regulation" it is proposed to strike out "and control," so that subdivision (e) will read:

(e) The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation of the coal industry.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I do not see how that can be done so long as the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is pending. He has moved to strike out the whole of subdivision (e). I do not see, therefore, how the Senator from Mississippi can move to strike out a part of it when there is an amendment pending to strike out all of it. If the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to strike out subdivision (e) should be defeated and subdivision (e) should be allowed to remain in the bill, then it seems to me the Senator from Mississippi, either as in Committee of the Whole or in the Senate, could move to strike out the words "and control," and leave in the provision as to regulation alone. I repeat, however, I do not see how he can get at it in the way he is trying.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will yield to me the rule is just to the contrary. An amendment must be perfected before the motion is in order to strike it out.

Mr. MYERS. To perfect what amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. The pending amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I did not understand that the Senator from Mississippi offered an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. I thought he was trying to amend the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Mississippi desires to perfect the language which is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, and such a motion is always in order before the motion to strike out is put.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LENROOT. He offers a preferential amendment, which is in order before the motion to strike out can be put.

Mr. MYERS. It is desired then, to perfect the bill, before the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is voted on. In that view of the case, I presume the Senator from Wisconsin is probably right about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the amendment be stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, line 4, after the word "regulation" it is proposed to strike out the words "and control," so as to read:

(e) The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation of the coal industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee. By the sound, the "noes" have it.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The other day the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], occupying the chair at the time, ruled that on a division, it having been revealed that not a quorum was present, there must be a quorum procured before the question could be determined. Does the Senator now presiding hold the same as the Senator from Connecticut did the other day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He does not.

Mr. MYERS. What was the result of the vote, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was lost.

The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment reported by the committee to strike out subdivision (e).

Mr. MYERS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand sustained?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that those in favor of sustaining the call for the yeas and nays be directed to rise and be counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those in favor of sustaining the demand for the yeas and nays will rise and be counted. [A pause.] Not a sufficient number have seconded the demand.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am against the amendment to strike out subdivision (e), for I think it will weaken the bill. I am going to vote contrary to the views of my friend from Montana, but I do think he is entitled to the yeas and nays on an important question like this. I hope he will ask again for the yeas and nays, and call the names of those who sit here and refuse to grant the yeas and nays on a vital question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules the question has been decided.

Mr. MYERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair hold that one-fifth of those present did not stand up and support the demand for the yeas and nays? There are only about a couple of dozen Senators present. Does the Presiding Officer hold that so many as half a dozen Senators did not stand up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there were 49 votes on the roll call just had, and the Chair is not advised as to how many Senators are now present.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	Nelson	Smith
Borah	Harreld	New	Smoot
Broussard	Harrison	Nicholson	Stanley
Bursum	Heflin	Oddie	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Sutherland
Capper	Kellogg	Ransdell	Swanson
Culberson	King	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Curtis	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	McLean	Shields	Watson, Ind.
du Pont	McNary	Shortridge
Fletcher	Myers	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ERNST answered to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. COLT entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the second subdivision of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been asked once, and refused. The question is on agreeing to the second subdivision of the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The second subdivision of the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move to strike out, on pages 10 and 11, the paragraph beginning on line 23 of page 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Beginning on page 10, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

> That every officer or employee of the United States whenever requested by the commission shall supply it with any data or information pertaining to any investigation by the commission which may be contained in the records of the office of such officer or employee.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I do not care to debate that amendment. The objection is obvious. While, strictly, that would not come within the objection of unreasonable search, it is so near it, and in my opinion such an inquisition and espionage on the private business of the citizens of the country, that I do not think it ought to be in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I know and we all know that certain classes of people in this country will hail with joy the enactment of this measure if it be enacted with the provision in it which is comprised in subdivision (d), at the top of page 9, which provides for investigation and report upon the advisability or wisdom of nationalizing the coal industry.

Among other people who would be greatly encouraged and heartened by the enactment of legislation of that kind are about 200 people who recently met in the woods in secret conclave in some obscure place in Michigan. They are avowed communists and revolutionists and are dedicated to the task of overthrowing this Government and totally changing our form of government by any means they can command—peaceful, lawful, unlawful, violent, revolutionary, bloody, or in any other way. Those people and the people whom they represent, that class of people, all look forward with great zest to nationalizing all industries in this country and nationalizing everything and everybody. Their dream and aim is the nationalization of everything. They want to nationalize not only the coal industry of the country but also the railroads, the manufacturing industries, the farms, the land, every resource in this country. They are working to have the Government take over everything and own it all, and make everybody an employee of the Government, and let some dictator who may happen to be at the head of the Government tell this man to work at this job and another man to work at another job; say that this man must work on a farm at a wage to be fixed by the dictator of the Government and that another must work at something else and take what wage may be fixed for him. They want to get hold of all of the industries of this country, so they can loot them and exploit them for their own greed, gain, and advantage, and make the rest work for the chosen few who may be dictators or favorites of the dictators, as it is in red Russia.

That was the aim of that meeting of some 200 people whom the newspapers report to have been in secret conclave in the woods in Michigan about a week or 10 days ago.

They meet in secret and plot in the dark. Their ways are those of darkness, but we know what their objects are.

Most of those people were arrested. Those who did not scatter and disappear and seek devious ways of getting out of sight were arrested, and among those caught by the officers and arrested was one W. F. Dunn, formerly a resident of Montana, who two years ago made a desperate effort, by proxy, to get control of the State of Montana and its government, and to apply there his vicious and nefarious doctrines. He was aided in that scheme by one A. C. Townley, who has since been convicted, and served a term in jail for disloyalty to his country during the World War. Their scheme was to get hold of the State of Montana and nationalize or socialize many things and many of the resources of the State; to erect and conduct State-owned warehouses, elevators, mills, creameries; to have State-owned newspapers, coal mines, stores, and banks; to build homes for people with State money, and do many things of like character.

Fortunately, their scheme was frustrated. It was tried in North Dakota for a number of years, and many experiments in State socialism were tried there. The State embarked upon an extensive plan of socialism; State-owned banks, warehouses, elevators, flour mills, and other institutions, which had prior to that time been conducted by private capital and enterprise were instituted or planned. As a result, the State was plunged heavily into debt and was placed in what was regarded as a precarious financial condition. The hold of the people who had put it in that condition was finally broken and thrown off, but neither the State of Montana nor the State of North Dakota appears to be yet wholly free from designs of that character by those who hold such views and advocate such schemes.

Of course, I do not say that a congressional investigation as to the advisability of nationalizing the coal industry of the country would necessarily lead to conditions of that kind. I am sure the esteemed Senator from Idaho has in mind to attain no such conditions as I have inveighed against. But my position is that such an investigation by official sanction would simply afford hope to that class of people who meet secretly and plot to sovietize this country; would hearten them, inspire them to renewed effort, and put renewed hope in their hearts.

In my opinion, it would simply stir up and stimulate the propaganda which has resulted in efforts of that kind being made to capture and control the resources of several of the States of the Union, and which looks ultimately to nationalizing or sovietizing everything in this country. I do not say the enactment of this one measure would lead to nationalizing the industries of this country; but what is the use of encouraging the idea if we do not want it done? Therefore I oppose the bill.

I am reluctant to believe that a majority of the Members of this body are in favor of nationalizing any industry in this country, or even want to take a step in that direction. I sincerely hope and believe that a majority of the Members of this body are not in favor of nationalizing any industry of this country which can be conducted by private capital and enterprise; and if a majority do not want to go to that length, why on earth they should encourage the people who do want to do so by holding out this bait to them to renew their agitation is more than I can see. I think it is the duty of all good citizens, Democrats and Republicans, to set their faces and minds firmly against socialism, sovietism, nationalization, and all such schemes, and to do nothing to countenance them. We must do so if America is to survive. As for me, I am against all such things.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the amendment be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill creating a commission to investigate the coal industry and sources of coal supply with a view to aiding Congress in framing such legislation relative to said industry and the supply of coal to the public as Congress has the power and may deem wise to enact."

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BORAH, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5214, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. BURSUM. I offer the following amendment to the bill. This amendment is designed to cover the items contained in the Senate committee report on House bills 6569, 7210, 7847, 8261, 8569, and 10643, and also Senate bills 3309 and 3919.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that we may proceed in order. The Senator should first obtain consent to consider the bill for action on the committee amendments. Is it a committee amendment that the Senator now proposes?

Mr. BURSUM. These are substantially the committee amendments, the idea being to consolidate the bills so as to obtain quick action. All the bills have been considered by the committee and reported to the Senate, and in view of the short time we have and the desire for quick action, and in view of the fact that these bills will necessarily go to conference with the House, the amendments are submitted in order to consolidate the bills and make them one bill. There are two pension committees of the House—the Committee on Invalid Pensions, relating to the Civil War, and the committee considering pensions for those who did not serve in the Civil War.

Mr. FLETCHER. I gather that the Senator is now offering as amendments to the pending bill some other pension bills?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; all the pension bills reported.

Mr. FLETCHER. Including the Mexican War and Indian war pension bills?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; that is, outside of the Civil War, House bills 6569, 7210, 7847, 8261, 8569, and 10643, as well as Senate bills 3309 and 3919. That is the only method by which we can hope to obtain final action at this session of Congress on these pension bills.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator offer Senate bill 3275 as an amendment to this bill?

Mr. BURSUM. No; that is a general bill. These are only private pension bills.

Mr. STERLING. Let me ask the Senator are not these the ordinary omnibus pension bills?

Mr. BURSUM. Exactly; and this action consolidates all of them.

Mr. STERLING. Is not the Senator from Florida right in asking that the committee amendments be passed upon first? The committee amendments are indicated in the bill by striking out certain lines.

Mr. BURSUM. They are; and in the bill which is now before the Senate the committee amendments cover the names which have been stricken off. The amendments which I am about to present cover the amendments in all the other bills and the object is to consolidate the several bills into one bill.

Mr. STERLING. But the Senator from Florida, I understand, asks that the committee amendments be first considered, which is the usual course of procedure.

Mr. BURSUM. Very well; I am agreeable to that course.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wanted to have the RECORD show that we are proceeding in an orderly manner. The first thing is to have the bill read. It would be proper, I take it, for the Senator to ask that the formal reading of the bill be waived and have it read for action on the committee amendments, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be waived and that the committee amendments be first considered, and that thereafter the amendments which I have offered be presented to the Senate for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will state the amendments of the committee in their order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. I move to insert after the item for Van Letsinger, line 9, and before the item for Peter McLaughlin, line 3, the following new paragraph:

The name of George M. Wright, late of Capt. June Peak's Company B, Frontier Battalion, Texas Rangers, Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would very much like to have the attention of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM]. This seems to be a very comprehensive bill, and there is a very small attendance of Senators at this time. A great many amendments have been proposed, and no objection has been made to them. I would be very glad if the Senator would state in a general way about what the bill covers, how much of an appropriation it will carry, and any other facts with reference to it which in his judgment may be desirable information to give to the Senate.

Mr. BURSUM. I will say to the Senator that the amendments which are proposed cover individual pensions which were disallowed by the Senate committee. None of the amendments propose an increase of pension. They involve pensions which the committee did not see fit to allow.

Mr. SIMMONS. They are stricken out?

Mr. BURSUM. They are stricken out. That is what the amendments do. This is a House bill, and nearly all the bills involved are House bills. The bills which were submitted and which passed the House involve, all told, approximately 1,600 individual cases. The committee did the best they could and used their best judgment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Am I to understand the Senator to say they have added about 1,600 names to the pension roll?

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, no; the bills which came from the House, as passed by the House, include, all told, about 1,600 cases, but that does not mean necessarily that they were added. Most of them involve increases.

Mr. SIMMONS. Most of the names are on the roll and the items give an increase of pension?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the Senator to say that the committee has carefully considered each item in the bill, and has eliminated some and made some reductions in other cases?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And since the bill left the House, the House has passed a number of separate bills and those are to be added in the form of amendments?

Mr. BURSUM. No; they were all passed by the House, but the proposition is that the House has passed several omnibus bills, the first of which was House bill 5214. The bills have all been reported to the Senate with amendments striking out quite a number of allowances which were made in the House. Now, on account of the short time remaining, I have proposed to consolidate the bills so as to have only 1 bill instead of 16 or 18. They have all been considered by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. What I desire especially to know is whether the Senator's committee has given consideratain to all the items in the bill?

Mr. BURSUM. To every one of them, and in every bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has not accepted them simply because the House passed them?

Mr. BURSUM. Not at all. I will say that over one-third of the items have been disallowed by the Senate committee. In every bill there are a large number which have been disallowed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator why there are so many amendments to the bill as reported, where items are stricken out? It seems to me at least one-third of the items in the bill are stricken out. Why is that done?

Mr. BURSUM. Because the committee believed that they were not justified in allowing the pensions. There is an individual report on each and every bill giving the reason for the action on each and every item. Of course, out of 1,600 cases it would be impossible for the chairman of the committee to recall every one of the individuals and the particular reasons why their cases were stricken out, but there is a written report on each and every item giving the reason why it was left out.

Mr. STERLING. It seemed to me that there was an unusual number of items stricken out.

Mr. BURSUM. There were about one-third of them stricken out. We tried to do the fair thing and to be liberal. The policy has been to be as liberal as possible, but it is impossible to allow every claim that comes to the committee.

Mr. STERLING. I thought there might be cases where the claimant had died after the introduction of the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. There are quite a number of such cases also. Those are noted and stricken out.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. NEW. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if he can tell us about how much in the aggregate the bills carry. If he has stated the amount, I have not heard it.

Mr. BURSUM. I should say that all told the bills in the aggregate would amount to approximately $600,000.

On page 12, line 10, I move to insert:

The name of William W. Jordan, late of Captain Hardee's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian War, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to understand the situation. I wish to ask the Senator if he has consolidated in this bill order of business No. 526, House bill 6507?

Mr. BURSUM. That belongs to the Civil War class.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is a separate bill?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bills which have been taken from the calendar and consolidated with the bill just passed will be indefinitely postponed.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] is unavoidably absent from the city and desires to be excused from further service as one of the conferees on the tariff bill. I ask that his request be granted, and that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] be substituted in his stead.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6507.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 3, after line 16, to strike out:

The name of Isola Foster, helpless and dependent daughter of Gideon W. Foster, late of Company H, One hundred and forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I understood from the chairman of the committee that he would ask to have this amendment disagreed to. I spoke to the Senator about it the other day and I understood that he would ask that it be disagreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. But in a supplementary amendment this item is included. I have looked into this case and it is a bona fide case and ought to be allowed. The girl is being cared for by the soldiers' home in the State of Washington now. My understanding is that the case is taken care of in a supplementary amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to correct one statement made inadvertently by the chairman of the committee. He said the girl is being cared for by the soldiers' home. She is being cared for by a Grand Army post.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 20, to strike out:

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, House bills numbered 7340, 7827, 8624, 8874, 10025, 11427, and 11533, and Senate bills numbered 3310 and 3920 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BURSUM. In the case of both of the bills which have just been passed I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House on the bills and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BURSUM, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. WALSH of Montana conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, line 10, after the word "discharged," to insert "from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged"; so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War, between April 12, 1861, and August 20, 1866, inclusive, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in service and line of duty, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the passage of this act and having attained the age of 62 years who has been, or may hereafter be placed on the pension roll under this or any other law, public or private, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month, and an additional pension of $6 a month for each child of the officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 17, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided, still further, That no pension shall be allowed or paid under this act to a widow or a former widow whose marriage to the soldier, sailor, or marine on account of whose service pension is claimed took place subsequent to March 3, 1899, unless such widow or former widow lived with such soldier, sailor, or marine continuously from the date of the marriage to the date of his death, or unless the continuity of the cohabitation was broken by soldier having deserted her or by conduct on his part compelled her to leave him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what increase this bill carries with it. It seems now it is proposed to fix the pension of Civil War veterans at $72 per month. What have they been receiving heretofore?

Mr. BURSUM. At present they receive $50 a month, but they receive $72 per month where they are unable to take care of themselves, and I understand the great majority of them are receiving the latter amount.

Mr. TRAMMELL. This bill provides that all of them shall receive $72 per month.

Mr. BURSUM. That is true, and the reason for it is that practically all of them are unable to care for themselves. Their average age is 78, and their expectancy of life is only about 5½ years. In order to obtain the $72 there is now required certain evidence, and compliance with certain forms and regulations, so that in many instances the veterans die before they receive the increase.

The number of veterans of the Civil War on the pension roll is rapidly diminishing. This year approximately 50 per cent will be separated from the rolls by death, and next year there will probably be a loss of 75 per cent, so that they only have a short time here; and if we are going to do anything to help them out in their old age, now that they are incapacitated, and to afford them relief on account of the high cost of living, they should have that relief immediately. It should be summary and automatic, and they should not be required to submit applications and proofs and all that sort of thing, which tend to retard the benefits which were intended to be given to the soldier.

I submit that $72 a month for an old veteran, as compared with the allowance we are giving now to those who served during the World War and who were disabled, is not unreasonable; it is a very meager allowance. Seventy-two dollars a month is no great sum. These men are all more than three score and ten years old; the youngest of them are more than 70, and the average is 78. They have only a few years to live. They need the increased pension and there ought to be no hesitancy about allowing them the rate proposed by the bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I just desired to know what the increase was. How much will the increase be, in the aggregate, per annum?

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator desires to know what increase in the appropriation this bill will require?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes; I just, as a matter of information, desire to know the increase authorized.

Mr. BURSUM. For the first year, about $60,000,000; but the second year it will probably require less money than we are appropriating now, because the number is being reduced at the rate of 50,000 a year now, and next year it will probably be 75,000, and it will decrease until there will be none left.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That would be true if no increase were made in the individual pensions; would it not? It would grow less annually?

Mr. BURSUM. That is very true; but no matter what we allow them as a pension, whenever they are dropped from the rolls they do not any longer draw a pension, and it is manifestly just and fair and right and equitable to give these veterans a little more allowance.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am in favor of giving them a liberal pension and am not raising any question about that, but I desired some information regarding the proposed increase and the need for this legislation.

Mr. BURSUM. I will say to the Senator that there is no question about their absolute need. There is no question about the righteousness or the fairness of this increase, and $72 is a very meager sum to take care of a family or where an attendant has to be employed to take care of the veteran. Seventy-two dollars a month will hardly pay his own expenses. How far would it go to take care of a family?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is very true where the condition exists that the Senator has detailed; but take the entire pension roll. Nothing like all of them are in a helpless condition, requiring attendants and nurses and care.

Mr. BURSUM. Most of them are. If any of us, after we become 78 years of age, do not require attendants, we are pretty lucky, and entitled to the benefit of the doubt.

All of the veterans, through their several posts and organizations, are most anxious and are pleading for this legislation. I could read to the Senate a thousand letters on the subject, and the stories that are told are pitiful. I can not for the life of me see how anyone could object to this increase as not being fair and equitable and reasonable and an absolute obligation on the part of the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me, I should like to ask the Senator what is the total amount now required to meet the pension appropriations?

Mr. BURSUM. It is less than $300,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. And this will add $60,000,000?

Mr. BURSUM. That is, for the first year, and, of course, not taking into account those who will drop from the rolls before they are paid any pension. The chances are that the net increase will be much less.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I just desired to get some information on this subject. I do not wish to raise any objection to giving liberal pensions to the veterans of the Civil War. I have always favored giving liberal pensions to the Confederate veterans through the State governments, and, of course, would not advocate a contrary policy regarding the Union soldiers. The only question with me is whether we might not go a little too far, considering the present financial condition of the country, in making an increase of $60,000,000 in one year to increase the pension allowance from $50 to $72 per month to all soldiers, regardless of their needs. Doubtless many of them need it, but the question is whether or not all of them do, and that is the reason for my inquiry of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Florida that the $60,000,000 which I stated was the estimate made by the Pension Bureau. That estimate has been revised in my office, and the examiner in my office estimates that the total expenditure will not exceed $35,000,000. At the same time the Commissioner of Pensions states that it will be two years before all of those who are given increases under the bill will be on the roll; so that if we were to compare the actual amount of cash necessary to be paid out of the Treasury there probably would not be an increase. My first statement with reference to the increase was upon the basis that all of those who are now on the roll continued on the roll and all of those who were given added pensions were continued on the roll, and there were no deaths. But, as I stated a few moments ago, more than 50,000 have been dropped from the roll this year, and next year there will be more, probably 75,000, and the number will increase until the veterans of the Civil War will be a matter of history.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 10, after the word "allowed," to insert "or may hereafter be allowed," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the rate of pension for the widow of an officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the War of 1812, or for 60 days or more in the war with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be $50 per month, and this section shall apply to any pension heretofore allowed or may hereafter be allowed under any law, public or private.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 24, after the word "without," to strike out "fault," and insert "proof of adultery," so as to read:

SEC. 4. That the former widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War between April 12, 1861, and August 20, 1866, inclusive, and was honorably discharged from such service, or who, having so served for less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and line of duty, such widow having married the officer or enlisted man prior to June 27, 1905, and having remarried, either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage has or have been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce without proof of adultery on the part of the wife, shall be entitled and be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month: Provided, That in case of any widow whose name has been dropped from the pension roll because of her remarriage, if the pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years of age, she shall not be entitled to renewal of pension under this act until the pension to such child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to such widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 12, after the word and figure "Sec. 5," to strike out "That the benefits of this act shall include any person who served during the late Civil War, or in the war with Mexico, and who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897," and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the benefits of this act shall be extended to and shall comprehend and include each and severally the classes of persons enumerated in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of section 4693, Revised Statutes of the United States, who served during the Civil War, and also any person who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897, on account of service during the Civil War and the war with Mexico, and the widows and minor children of such persons: Provided, That service under this act shall be proven in the manner and form specified in section 2, act of March 4, 1917.

Mr. BURSUM. On page 6, line 5, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "act" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "section."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. On page 6, line 7, after the figures "1917," I move to add "and the act of September 1, 1922."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, the effect of which is to include the nurses of the Civil War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the conclusion of section 5, page 6, line 7, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section, namely:

SEC. 6. That all Army nurses of the Civil War who have been or who may hereafter be allowed a pension under existing laws shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. It is also proposed to renumber the sections in accordance with the amendments made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which would have to be called section 7 now, since the adoption of the amendment that has just been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. 7. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension to the soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension roll, or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the acts of July 27, 1892, June 27, 1902, May 30, 1908, or under the act of March 4, 1917, shall be $30 per month, and that the rate of pension to the widows of soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension roll or who may hereafter be placed thereon under said acts shall be $20 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Now, I offer another amendment to strike out section 6 as it appears in the bill and insert the matter I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 6 as it appears in the bill, being lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 on page 6, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the pension or increase of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided on the 1st day of the next month after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the purpose of that amendment is to make it unnecessary for all those provided for in the pending bill to apply for the increase of pension. It will save time and expense and annoyance. It will protect those who live in remote sections of the country, who would not be likely to hear of the provisions of the bill for some time, perhaps never, and yet who would be just as much entitled to its benefits as those who keep posted on pension legislation. It would relieve congestion of work in the Bureau of Pensions, I believe, and make it unnecessary for the bureau to employ additional clerks and examiners. It would save the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars in administering the provisions of the act, and it would relieve Members of Congress of a flood of correspondence.

I think it is important to adopt this amendment, taking the place of section 6 as it appears in the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the only difference is that under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida these pensions would be raised in accordance with the bill automatically. As the bill provides at present, it would be necessary for the veterans to make application. There is difference of opinion as to that on the part of those who are interested in the bill, and also so far as the Pension Bureau is concerned. Some say that to make the increase of pension automatic would increase the burdens of the Government a little too fast. Personally, I can see no objection to it, and will leave the matter to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. The adoption of those two amendments will necessitate the changing of the title. That is a matter to which we can attend a little later, but I call attention to it now. The title should be amended so that after the figures "1812," in the title, there will follow the words "and certain Indian war veterans and widows." Then the sections will have to be renumbered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that an amendment to the title is not properly in order until after the passage of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows."

LIBERIAN LOAN.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia, with the announcement that if it is made the unfinished business I do not intend to call it up until Monday. I shall ask that it be laid aside for to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 270.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if that is agreeable to the Senator from North Carolina and the other minority members of the committee?

Mr. CURTIS. I spoke to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and others, and the agreement was that the joint resolution would not be taken up for consideration until next week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution is temporarily laid aside.

PENSIONS TO STATE MILITIA.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 211, another pension bill.

Mr. WARREN. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the bill by title.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 211) to extend the provisions of the pension act of May 11, 1912, and May 1, 1920, to the officers and enlisted men of all State militia and other State organizations that rendered service to the Union cause during the Civil War for a period of 90 days or more, and providing pensions for their widows, minor children, and dependent parents, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question in regard to this bill. I understand that it would mean entering into a new field, paying United States pensions to soldiers and officers of the different States without reference to service to the United States.

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, no; not at all. The bill would simply give what Congress gave under section 4693 of the Revised Statutes, but the provisions of that act expired in 1874. It would not allow any pension to any militiaman who did not serve in the Army of the United States in the Civil War. There were certain militiamen, notably in the State of Missouri and in the State of Kentucky, who would be covered by this bill.

Mr. WARREN. Those Missouri cases have been before different committees of the Senate a great many times. We have had no opportunity to read this bill, and I shall have to object to its present consideration.

Mr. BURSUM. I will say to the Senator that these ex-soldiers might have obtained their pensions earlier, but they failed to make application, and the law expired by limitation in 1874. The chances are that there are very few who would come in under the extension of the provisions of the law of 1874.

Mr. WARREN. Let the bill go over until I can look into it further. I have very strong opinions about the measure.

Mr. BURSUM. Very well; let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico withdraws his request.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, September 9, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, September 9, 1922.

Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou didst breathe upon man and he became a living soul; and day by day and every day in Thee we live and move and have our being. Teach us the sacredness of the body and the responsibility of life.

And especially in this hour we remember that Thou hast come with illness and suffering to the home of the Chief Executive. If it be Thy holy will, lift Thy hand and speedily restore her whom Thou hast laid upon the bed of pain and anxiety. Give skill to the physicians; give efficacy to the medicines that may be used. Give knowledge and tenderness and kindness to those who are round about her to care for her. Do Thou in these hours sustain her by Thy Spirit, that in all things and through all things she may rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him.

Give unto Thy servant, the President of the United States, strength in these hours, the grace of Thy Spirit, and power to wait and endure, the will to look for the love of God, the heavenly Father.

And unto all of us give Thy benediction to save our souls from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling. Let Thy grace be unto the Members of the United States Senate as they now convene. Keep them in health of body and vigor of mind, and fit them for all Thou hast appointed unto them to be or to do this day, that their living and their service may be in harmony of council for the good of the Republic and to the glory of Thy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CIVIL-SERVICE RECLASSIFICATION.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I present a petition, numerously signed, by a number of citizens of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the early passage of the reclassification bill. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and printed in the RECORD without the names.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Civil Service, and the body of it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 24, 1922.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
Chairman Civil Service Reclassification Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, the undersigned registered voters, now residing in the city of St. Louis, Mo., are heartily in favor of the speedy passage of the Lehlbach-Sterling civil service reclassification bill, which is now before the Senate, and we would respectfully request that you exercise your influence to secure immediate action on this worthy bill.

JURISDICTION OF PORTO RICAN COURTS.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9270) to confer upon the Territorial courts of Porto Rico concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts of that district of all offenses under the national prohibition act and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, reported it without amendment.

EXTERMINATION OF INSECTS.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the House has passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 66) appropriating $2,500, one-half of the expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House, for the purpose of exterminating and banishing insects from the Capitol Building and the two office buildings. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which the concurrent resolution was referred, report back the concurrent resolution favorably and have added a provision including the extermination and the eradication of rats and mice, and increasing the appropriation from $2,500 to $4,500. I ask for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the word "insects" to insert "rats and mice," and in line 6, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$4,500," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make a contract for the extermination and banishment of insects, rats, and mice from the House Office Building, the Capitol, and the Senate Office Building at an expenditure not to exceed $4,500. That the expenditures in carrying out the contract be paid from the contingent funds of the House and Senate in equal proportions, and upon vouchers authorized by the respective committees having control of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives and approved by the chairmen thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

HARLEM RIVER SHIP CANAL.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, by an act of Congress of March 4, 1913, certain waterway improvements were authorized in connection with the improvement of the Harlem River ship canal to connect the Hudson River with Long Island Sound. The legislation provided that the State of New York should contribute toward this improvement. It has been found necessary to acquire certain property which New York State is required to pay for and the last legislature authorized an appropriation of $1,500,000 for this purpose. It seems that the property has recently been deeded to the New York Central Railroad Co. I offer a Senate resolution for the purpose of inquiring of the War Department whether the property sold to the railroad company would interfere with this project. It is simply a resolution asking for information, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution be reported.

The resolution (S. Res. 347) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to report to the Senate as soon as practicable, after due investigation, whether the conveyances made in June, 1922, by Isaac G. Johnson & Co., a corporation of the State of New York, to the New York Central Railroad Co., also a corporation of the State of New York, of certain land within or contiguous to the proposed modification of the channel of the Harlem River Ship Canal, prevents or seriously interferes with the straightening of such waterway in accordance with the project of improvement which was adopted and authorized by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, such waterway improvement being necessary for the purpose of facilitating and cheapening the transportation to, from, and between the States and municipalities riparian to the Great Lakes, the Barge Canal of the State of New York, and all the States and towns bordering upon Long Island Sound and the seaboard of New England.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Reserving the right to object until I can make an inquiry, I would like to ask the Senator from New York whether the improvement alluded to in the resolution has ever been authorized by Congress and has been appropriated for?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; but the appropriation in the main comes from the State of New York. The resolution simply inquires whether the property deeded by the Johnson Corporation to the railroad company will interfere with the project. It does not commit Congress to anything.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that, but the Senator does not understand the inquiry, I think. Has Congress appropriated anything?

Mr. CALDER. It has.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. How much?

Mr. CALDER. I do not know.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should be glad to have the resolution read again.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to that. I do not ask for it myself, but I will suspend my remarks while it is being read again.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not understand the purpose of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, what I wanted to ask the Senator is whether the improvement is to be constructed under the auspices of the engineers of the United States Army?

Mr. CALDER. The improvement is to be constructed under the supervision of the engineers of the United States Army, but the State of New York pays the larger part of the money for the work.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. By some agreement with the War Department?

Mr. CALDER. Yes. It is simply a resolution asking for information.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that is all it is, but what I do not quite understand is what makes it necessary to inquire of the War Department whether in its opinion the conveyance of land to the railroad company referred to in the resolution will or will not affect the project? Are not the authorities in the State of New York satisfied as to whether it will or will not?

Mr. CALDER. The authorities of the State of New York are uncertain. They are inclined to believe the conveyancing of the property does interfere with the project, and they desire the War Department to make a definite statement whether it does or not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The conveyance has been made, I understand.

Mr. CALDER. I am so informed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution, but if the land has been conveyed to the railroad company I do not exactly see but what the inquiry is more or less academic.

Mr. CALDER. There is some doubt as to whether the land deeded by the Johnson Co. to the railroad company affects the direction of the proposed change in the line of the channel of the ship canal. New York State is anxious to have that fact definitely established.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All they will get definitely established, if the resolution of the Senator is responded to by the War Department, will be that in the opinion of the department, it either does or does not interfere, and then what?

Mr. CALDER. Then we propose to ask the War Department to take appropriate action, perhaps to set aside the conveyance, if that can be done. At any rate, we shall have the knowledge.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think that, as a matter of law, the conveyance could be set aside, if it has been made in good faith, except by condemnation proceedings. I wish to ask the Senator whether the legislation already passed in relation to this matter gives the authorities the right to condemn the land necessary for the construction of the project?

Mr. CALDER. It does; and it seems to us to be important, before the railroad company goes ahead with improvements on this land, which will mean the expenditure of larger sums of money if it should be condemned, that the facts asked for should be established. I might add that the Legislature of New York at its session appropriated $1,500,000 to purchase this land.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt it is a meritorious project and, as I have stated, I shall not object; but in the light of the last few remarks of the Senator, I think that I can see as through a glass darkly the motive of the resolution, which is to file a lis pendens of record and to issue a caveat of warning to the railroad company not to improve the property which they have bought until the Government decides whether or not it wishes to institute condemnation proceedings. I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that there is a recital in the latter part of the resolution which may be true or which may not be true, but I do not think it ought to be included in the resolution.

Mr. CALDER. I have no objection to striking out the portion of the resolution to which the Senator from Washington refers.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will consent to strike that out, then I shall have no objection to the consideration of the resolution. I refer to the portion of the resolution following the reference to the act of Congress under which the project was approved.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to observe that, in the opinion of the Chair, no debate is in order. The Chair will, however, recognize the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to inquire what part of the resolution it is proposed to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the portion of the resolution proposed to be stricken out.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from New York proposes to modify his resolution by striking out the following language—

Such waterway improvement being necessary for the purpose of facilitating and cheapening the transportation to, from, and between the States and municipalities riparian to the Great Lakes, the Barge Canal of the State of New York, and all the States and towns bordering upon Long Island Sound and the seaboard of New England.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand the Senator from New York, the resolution refers to a project which has been adopted by the Government and that the State of New York is to furnish certain of the lands and right of way?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the Legislature of New York has appropriated $1,500,000 for that purpose, but has probably sat down and allowed the land to pass to somebody else in the meantime. I can not see how the actual conveyance of the land itself which is wanted would obstruct the enterprise in any way. If the land is needed, if it is going to interfere with the construction of the project, it seems to me it will be entirely within the power of the State of New York to correct that situation by proper proceedings. I do not see how the War Department can do more than say that the land embraced in the deeds mentioned will be needed for the improvement of that waterway. That is about all they can say. They can not say that the conveyance will obstruct the project.

Mr. CALDER. The resolution simply provides that the War Department shall furnish the Senate information as to whether or not the lands conveyed, as stated in the resolution, will interfere with the project which is under way.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must again observe that the Senate is acting under a unanimous-consent agreement, which permits the transaction of nothing but routine morning business, unless there is unanimous consent to transact some other kind of business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understood that a unanimous-consent request was pending for the immediate consideration of the resolution, and pending the granting of unanimous consent it has generally been the custom, as I have understood, that Senators were allowed, in order to elicit information concerning the matter for the consideration of which their consent was asked, to secure information about it.

It has been the custom for Senators to say, "Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask a question"; and, of course, the interrogatories may continue by unanimous consent until Senators may be satisfied that they ought not to object to the request, as I had supposed. Assuming, in the absence of objection, that I am proceeding by unanimous consent, I wish to make an observation about the resolution. If, however, I am out of order I shall resume my seat.

I wish to say, if I may be allowed, Mr. President, that I think the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is entirely correct. I think in no event can the conveyance from one party to another of the land referred to in the resolution interfere with the project. It will make no difference who is the owner of record of the land in question. Either the Government of the United States or the State of New York has authority to condemn it on the ground that it is necessary for this great public purpose. Therefore I regard the resolution, without having any information of the intention of the drafter of the resolution as to what it will accomplish, as more or less a desirable thing, because it will be regarded by the railroad company, I have no doubt, if they can see through a hole in a millstone, as a notice that if they make any improvement upon this property in the pending situation they will be very likely not to receive compensation for doing so when condemnation proceedings shall be instituted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution as modified by its author?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that the word "authorized" in the resolution should be changed to "directed," so as to read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to the Senate—

And so forth.

Mr. CALDER. I shall be glad to have the resolution so modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified as proposed by the Senator from New York at the suggestion of the Senator from Washington. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRELD:

A bill (S. 3989) to appropriate $500,000 for the purchase of seed grain to be supplied to farmers in the crop-failure areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3990) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Brooklyn Museum the silver service which was presented to the cruiser Brooklyn by citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3991) granting a pension to Wilbert Harless; to the Committee on Pensions.

FEDERAL AID TO PUBLIC-ROAD PROJECTS.

Mr. HARRELD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 346), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Whereas it has been charged, especially in the State of Oklahoma, that certain State highway departments, especially the State Highway Department of Oklahoma, has been governed by favoritism and political considerations in laying out road projects for which Federal aid under the acts providing for Federal aid to public-road projects, initiated by the State highway department, was asked and desired; and

Whereas it appears that in the said State of Oklahoma it is charged that certain counties in said State have been favored in the granting of such Federal aid because of favoritism and political considerations, and that as a result thereof certain counties and road projects in said counties have received more of Federal aid than that to which they were entitled, while other counties and projects have been entirely ignored, refused Federal aid or else given very much less than that to which they were entitled under a fair apportionment; and

Whereas such discriminations, if practiced by the State highway departments, are inimical to the best interests of the Federal aid system for public roads: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Federal Road Bureau, be, and is hereby, requested to make investigation and report to the Senate whether or not there are any such discriminations being made and the particulars in each case for the information of the Senate.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed, and, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday, the Secretary will now proceed to call the Calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills, beginning at Calendar No. 555.

VERNON STREET, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2130) changing the name of Vernon Street in the county of Washington, District of Columbia, to U Street, was announced as first in order.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, that bill was recommended by the District Commissioners; but the request for the legislation has been withdrawn; nobody now wants the bill to be passed, and I therefore move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL WAR MILITARY TELEGRAPH CORPS.

The bill (S. 1343) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War, was announced as next in order, and the reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire what the effect of this bill will be? I understand that it will give a pensionable status to some 1,500 people. I inquire how many will be affected by it?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the bill will affect about 100 people. There were 1,500 originally in the military telegraph service, but there are only about 100 alive to-day who would be affected by the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was going to suggest that I think the bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Washington.

MERGER OF DISTRICT RAILWAY CORPORATIONS.

The bill (S. 3296) to authorize the merger of certain street railway corporations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and the reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire if this is the same bill the passage of which the Senator from Washington moved to reconsider some days ago?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is substantially the same bill, except that it contains an amendment which should have been in the other bill relating to the taxation of the excess income of the corporations.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from Washington has no objection to it, I shall not raise any. I merely wished to call the matter to his attention.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am much better satisfied with this bill, in view of the amendment which has been reported to it, than with the bill which was passed some days ago. If the bill which was passed then had contained a similar amendment, I should not have asked for the reconsideration of the vote by which it passed. However, I withdrew the motion to reconsider with the understanding that the committee in the House will report the bill out, if they shall report it at all, with the exact amendment that the bill now under consideration contains. So if there is no objection, I should like to have this bill passed this morning with the amendment reported by the committee. The other bill, I think, was read in full, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill at this time may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the further reading of the bill will be dispensed with. The Secretary will state the amendments reported by the committee.

The READING CLERK. In section 2, page 4, line 1, after the word "Company," it is proposed to insert the words "the East," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the Capital Traction Co., Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co., the Washington & Maryland Railway Co., the Washington & Virginia Railway Co., the Washington & Old Dominion Railway Co., the Washington Railway & Electric Co., the Georgetown & Tennallytown Railway Co., the Washington-Interurban Railroad Co., the City & Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Washington & Rockville Railway Co. of Montgomery County are hereby authorized to merge or consolidate all and singular their respective corporate rights, privileges, and franchises, and all their respective works and properties, real and personal, tangible and intangible, into one corporation and property for the ownership, management, control, and operation of all their said works, properties, rights, privileges, and franchises under such corporate name as may be adopted under the following conditions:

(a) The said corporations may, by agreement in writing, assented to by the owners of record of at least 75 per cent of the capital stock of each of them, agree to merge and consolidate into a single corporation and to own and operate all the rights, estates, works, properties, and franchises aforesaid owned by them under such corporate name as may be adopted and stated in said agreement and upon such terms and conditions not contrary to the provisions hereof as they may agree upon, but subject to the approval in writing of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. Upon the execution of the said agreement in writing and its approval by the Public Utilities Commission and the lodging thereof in the office of the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia for record, as hereinafter provided, the said merger and consolidation shall be complete and the merged or consolidated corporation shall be and become a body politic and corporate under the name so agreed on. It may sue and be sued thereby; may adopt and have a common seal and may change the same at pleasure, and shall have, own, and possess all and singular the rights, privileges, and franchises of each of said corporations parties to said agreement, their works and properties, and may own, operate, control, and mortgage all the said estates, works, properties, rights, and franchises of the several corporations merged, and shall be subject to all the duties, restrictions, and obligations imposed by law upon the several corporations whose estates, rights, and franchises it acquires pursuant to the provisions of this act except as the same may be modified by this act.

(b) The approval of the stockholders herein provided for may be given by the consent in writing of the owners of record of at least 75 per cent of the capital stock of each company parties to said agreement or by the vote of the owners of at least 75 per cent of the capital stock of each of such companies represented at a special meeting called and held as prescribed by the by-laws of the several companies or by law. When a certificate shall be filed with the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, signed and acknowledged by a majority of the board of directors of each of the corporations to be affected thereby and certified under the seals of each of said corporations showing the agreement for consolidation and merger and all of the terms thereof and its conformity with the provisions of this section, such certificate shall be presumptive evidence of the facts therein set forth, and thereupon said Public Utilities Commission shall approve or disapprove the same and certify its action thereon by certificate to be attached thereto under its seal, and if approved it shall forward the same with the certificate of its approval thereon to the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, who shall indorse thereon the day and hour of its receipt and record the same in his offices. If the commission shall disapprove the same, its action thereon and a statement of its reasons therefor shall be forwarded to each of the corporations parties to said agreement.
